Report: Pe Ell Dam Would Use Most of County's Sand and Gravel

STUDY: DNR Says Dam Included Only as a Variable for Long Term Planning

By Dameon Pesanti
dpesanti@chronline.com

A recent report released by the Washington Department of Natural Resources said Lewis County has raised some questions about how much of the county's aggregate rock a proposed dam in the Pe Ell area would use.

But officials involved with the report and the dam project say it would likely be built out of a different material.

In the report titled, Rock Aggregate Resource Inventory Map of Lewis County, Washington, the DNR mapped the county's inventory of the aggregate rock — the sand and gravel and crushed stone that is typically used in cement, asphalt or graded fill.

BATTLE: Civil War Re-enactors Dedicated to 'Living History'

By Natalie Johnson
njohnson@chronline.com

Cannon fire and rifle shots reverberated from the battlefield off Tune Road in Chehalis Saturday as hundreds of history enthusiasts re-enacted one of the final battles of the Civil War.

Participants said re-enactments are the best way to communicate the horrors, triumphs and realities of the Civil War to a modern audience.

"I love history. I have since, I'd say, the eighth grade," said Darna Michie, whose husband portrayed a Union Army major Saturday. "When history became something more than dates and numbers, that's when it became interesting."

The Veterans Memorial Museum in Chehalis has presented the re-enactments each year since 2011 to celebrate the Civil War's sesquicentennial, or 150th anniversary, said Chip Duncan, executive director of the museum.

"Our mission is to honor veterans. There are no living veterans of the Civil War," he said. "Once you have veterans passing away, that part of history is relegated to the history books."

Owl With an Attitude Wins Face-Off With Deputy

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — A Boulder County sheriff's deputy got into a face-off with an owl with an attitude, and the owl won.

Deputy Sophie Berman came across the raptor on a dirt road on Tuesday as Berman patrolled an area near a campground west of Boulder.

Berman crouched down to take video of the owl and spoke to the owl, which answered Berman's words with clicks.

The owl stared wide-eyed at the deputy for a few minutes before turning around and flying away.

Former 41-Pound Fat Cat in Texas Slims Down to 19 Pounds

DALLAS (AP) — A former 41-pound cat dubbed Skinny has lost more than half of his weight to become the darling of a Dallas veterinary clinic.

Dr. Brittney Barton says the orange tabby she adopted in 2013 has slimmed down to 19 pounds with exercise and a special diet. Barton calls Skinny the "resident cat" at her practice, HEAL Veterinary Hospital.

Barton said Friday that Skinny spends weekdays roaming the clinic. The ex-fat cat's weekends are spent at home with Barton and her family.

Skinny was found abandoned near Dallas in 2012 and ended up at a shelter. The vet says Skinny just had his annual checkup and is healthy.

Barton says Skinny is living proof that while he's supposed to be a large cat, "he's not supposed to be an obese cat."

Putrid-Smelling Flower Attracts Large Crowds in California

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Officials with UC Berkeley's botanical garden say the garden had its busiest day in more than a decade as people flocked to get a whiff of the "corpse flower," a plant known for its pungent odor.

KPIX-TV reported that the Sumatran titan arum nicknamed "Trudy" came into full bloom Sunday and brought out about 1,000 visitors. The garden wrote on Twitter that the plant would only be smelly on Sunday and would begin to go limp Monday.

Associate director for visitors services Jonathan Goodrich says Trudy started to open and was flowering when garden officials left for the day on Saturday. By Sunday, the plant had run its course.

Goodrich says the large plant's smell is similar to "dirty socks wrapped around a rotting steak."

Hair Dresser Faces Voyeurism Charges in Arizona Cities

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — A man who allegedly traveled around Arizona pretending to be a hair dresser so he could take sexually explicit photos of his clients has been apprehended.

The U.S. Marshals Service says a task force arrested 53-year-old James Hickey on Friday while he was bike-riding in Flagstaff.

Hickey is wanted on 14 counts of surreptitious videotaping as well as charges of voyeurism and probation violation.

Authorities say Hickey would approach homes and apartment complexes and pose as a hair dresser looking for in-home work. While cutting people's hair, he allegedly secretly recorded or took sexually graphic pictures.

He is suspected of offenses in Phoenix, Scottsdale, Flagstaff and Huntington Beach, California. Hickey previously served time for burglary and unlawful recording and videotaping.

Daily Outtake: Ann Rule in Lewis County

Author Ann Rule attempts to pass questions written on small slips of paper forward to Barb Thompson, the mother of Ronda Reynolds, during the Lewis County Coroner's inquest into Reynolds' 1998 death in November 2011. Thompson, classified by the coroner as a "Person Especially Interested" in the case, was permitted to submit questions that the coroner would put to witnesses, but in this instance the coroner did not accept Thompson's questions because they came from Rule. Rule, a true crime author known throughout the country for her work in the Pacific Northwest, died Monday. See a short news item on page Main 13.

Fish in Hot Water as Drought Drags On

DEATHS: No Changes Announced for Chehalis, Cowlitz Fisheries; Columbia River Takes a Beating

By Jordan Nailon
For The Chronicle

During this scorching summer season of drought and parched earth, the region's pervasive wildfires have received the bulk of the spotlight.

That focus is appropriate enough given the destructive nature, mind-staggering size and awe-inspiring visuals created by the reckless walls of flames as they incinerate, in some cases, thousand-year-old trees.

However, there is another sad story brewing just beneath the surface of our area rivers, and it is killing the fish.

This drought began long before the rain stopped falling and the mercury in thermometers rose. The drought started in the mountains this winter and now it has finally reached the lowland drainages across the region. Rivers that are typically fed by cold coursing flows of snow and glacial melt are this year barely scraping by on pitiful volumes of sun-warmed surface water.

As a result, some rivers, including stretches of the Columbia River, have been experiencing water temperatures as high as the upper 70s.

The prized fish of the Pacific Northwest are precisely adapted to their environment and they are highly susceptible to even subtle changes. Salmonids in particular become stressed once the water noses above 68 degrees F, and they cease their migrations at 74 degrees.

"A lot of people are concerned about what the conditions this summer and fall will mean for our fish and fisheries," noted WDFW Drought Coordinator Teresa Scott in an email.

The salmon and sturgeon of our area are not suited to the paltry flows of bathtub-warm water that now plague the region. As a result the fish are increasingly winding up stranded, diseased, or simply washing ashore dead.

"A lot of salmon are getting sick with bacterial and fungal diseases because of the high water temperatures they are experiencing," explained Scott. "Some migrations have been interrupted because streams are too warm for salmon to enter. In some places, flow is low enough that some fish will have difficulty migrating upstream, even if water temperatures (are) tolerable."

AS PART of a concerted effort to help the fish along, a number of regulation changes have already been implemented on rivers across the state. Earlier this month, 30 rivers in Washington, including the Washougal and East Fork Lewis rivers in Southwest Washington, were subjected to closures or regulation adjustments in order to limit controllable pressures on the fish. Oregon simultaneously implemented a similar list of amendments.

One regulation change allows for the harvest of un-clipped chinook on the lower Columbia River. Unclipped salmon are generally required to be released as part of a strategy to increase wild populations of the federally protected fish.

This summer though, the warm water temperatures have inflated mortality rates of caught and released fish to the point that the WDFW deemed it preferable to allow anglers to keep whichever chinook they catch first. The daily limit was subsequently reduced to one chinook per day.

Other regulation changes included the so called "Hoot-Owl" restrictions, which are meant to keep anglers from pulling fish out of the river during the hottest parts of the day. Any river under "Hoot-Owl" rules is closed to fishing from 2 p.m. until midnight.

ON THE COLUMBIA RIVER, sturgeon retention has been closed down indefinitely after more than 80 oversize sturgeon were found dead and washed ashore upriver from Bonneville Dam. That closure and mass die-off came two weeks ago when the

Gordon King / The Associated Press

Commercial fisherman Les Clark pulls a sockeye, or blueback salmon, from his net while fishing on the Columbia River near Skamania. More than a quarter million sockeye salmon returning from the ocean to spawn are either dead or dying in the Columbia River and its tributaries due to warming water temperatures. Federal and state fisheries biologists say the warm water is lethal for the cold-water species and is wiping out at least half of the 2015 return of 500,000 fish.

river temperature in the Bonneville Pool was hovering at 73 degrees, nearly 10 degrees above its year-to-date average.

A strong run of Columbia River sockeye salmon is also being punished by the tepid water. About half of the returning fish, which were supposed to number 500,000, have already died, and it is feared that up to 80 percent of the run could ultimately perish short of their spawning grounds. As a result sockeye retention has been closed on the upper Columbia River.

Around that same time, 100 spring chinook were found stranded and dead on the Middle Fork John Day River. Elsewhere, reports have surfaced telling of WDFW employees and concerned citizens bucketing or hand carrying stranded fish upriver of stream blockages in order to prevent imminent deaths.

While the warm water has jackknifed river migrations, it also seems to be drawing fish in from the ocean earlier than normal. Coho in the lower Columbia River began showing up in such large numbers that the WDFW put a moratorium on their harvest until Aug. 1.

"We didn't expect to see coho salmon arrive in the Columbia River in July, so our initial regulations didn't specifically preclude catching them," said Ron Roler, WDFW fishery manager, in a press release.

"Warm water temperatures typically slow salmon migration," added Roler. "Then again, this isn't a typical summer for fish management."

NBODY FROM the WDFW would comment on the possibility of additional regulation changes on local rivers — including the Chehalis and Cowlitz — so anglers and concerned citizens will need to stay tuned for any impending adjustments to the local fisheries.

Ocean fishing is one area where things seem to be holding steady.

According to Butch Smith, president of the Ilwaco Charter Association, there has been no talk of shuttering ocean fishing. Those fisheries are managed under strict quota regulations and so far the fishing has been "very good."

"It is a lot different when they get into the rivers," explained Smith. "Warm water is a big stress factor and then you add all kinds of fishing activity on top of that (and) the fish can't take it."

Counterintuitively, some local anglers believe that the current river conditions could in fact improve angling success this year, so long as the rivers stay open.

Cameron Black, owner of Gone Catchin' guide service out of Woodland, said, "Truth be told it's actually, in some situations, making the fishing insanely better."

According to Black, "Less water for the fish to move in means less area to look to find them in. Some of the restrictions on other rivers have been in response to the fact that it's just too easy to target them."

BLACK ANTICIPATES that the rest of the salmon fishing on the lower Columbia River this summer and fall, at least until the serious rains come, will be highly concentrated around the mouths of the Cowlitz and Lewis rivers. Those tributaries are staying relatively cool as they pump high-country sourced water down to the Columbia. When those rivers reach the Columbia, they create a cool pool of water where migrating fish cluster for a breather.

The concentrated fish and subsequent fishing efforts may prove to be a boon for anglers in possession of a 2015 Columbia River license endorsement, but spiked harvest rates and high mortality rates will likely come full circle in four to seven years when the spawn of this year's returning salmonids would be due to make their own run home from the ocean.

According to Black, the restrictions and closures on Washington's rivers haven't had much of an impact on the charter and guide industry so far since most of the affected rivers are relatively small, and thus they are not prime destinations for paying customers.

"The Cowlitz and Columbia are dam-fed, so the chance that they get shut down before we get rain are slim to nil," said Black, who has spent all of July chartering his boat out in Marine Area 1 because he didn't want to target chinook in the warm river water.

"That decision kind of bit me in the butt," once they opened up chinook harvest to unmarked fish, noted Black.

"I think by mid-September if we don't see any rain that there could be some more closures," added Black. "By then I'd imagine that we'd have some rain, if not we could see some change."

The biggest blip on the angling radar these days is a regulation change set to take place on Aug. 1 near the mouth of the Columbia River.

On that day fishing is set to be extended from the Astoria-Megler Bridge downriver to Buoy 10.

WITH COHO lurching into the Columbia already, and the bulk of coho that captains like Black have encountered, it stands to reason that a large swell of fish are lurking at or near the mouth of the river already.

"Guys fishing above the bridge have been knocking the freeing crap out of them right now," gushed Black.

"The fish are coming in (from the ocean) and just stopping. They're pausing."

A large incoming tide that will push hordes of those precise fish past the river threshold is expected to coincide with the opening of the lower most stretch of the Columbia River.

"That's right where we will be," proclaimed Black. "I have a very strong feeling that when they open that area on Aug. 1 that it's going to be a slaughter."

Black's only concern is that the hot fishing could tax the fishery quota too quickly.

As fishery managers and anglers try to keep pace with the evolving conditions of the local rivers many observers have wondered if this type of weather and the subsequent fisheries management will become part of a new normal for this typically verdant and well irrigated region.

Teresa Scott shares those worries.

"Clearly, the fate of salmon fishing is tied to the fate of salmon populations. We have several runs of salmon listed under the federal Endangered Species Act, and that alone should be telling us that more needs to be done to improve conditions for salmon."

Scott then added, "Salmon have survived anomalous climate/weather periods in the past, so while we can expect short-term effects to numbers of returning fish and to fisheries, it would be premature to try to project into the future based on this one drought year."

Conceding that this year's conditions may be a harbinger for the future, Scott surmised, "I would not characterize climate change as something to be feared, but rather as something to prepare for and adapt to."

"Staying competitively priced when you're distributing around the country can be a challenge. If the cost of doing business increases, it affects our ability to grow and create jobs."

Jean Thompson, CEO & Owner
Seattle Chocolates

Sweet, creamy ascent.

In early 2015, Seattle Chocolates CEO Jean Thompson ascended 19,341-foot Mt. Kilimanjaro in Tanzania, Africa, fulfilling a lifelong dream. Successfully reaching the top required following the slow, deliberate steps of experienced trail guides during the six-day journey. It's not the first time Jean experienced a steep, difficult climb.

When the Nisqually earthquake hit in 2001, Seattle Chocolates was one of two buildings in Seattle leveled by the destructive quake. Jean and her ownership team regrouped, and today they are on a well-earned ascent to total chocolate domination.

But competition is stiff. "We are situated in the upper north left corner of the country," notes Jean. "Staying competitively priced when you're distributing around the country can be a challenge. If the cost of doing business increases, it affects our ability to grow and create jobs."

Primary Provides Chance to Impact Local Gov't

During a visit at The Chronicle recently, Washington Secretary of State Kim Wyman predicted a 26 percent turnout of eligible voters in the upcoming Aug. 4 primary. While admitting arriving at such a precise number requires some arbitrary analysis, she lamented the longstanding trend of few voters filling out their ballots in off-year elections. "This is always the most challenging election of the four-year cycle because, ironically, the positions that affect people's daily lives are not always the most glamorous ones," Wyman said. By now, most are aware of the cycle, and beyond somehow peeling back layers of apparent voter indifference and apathy, there isn't much that can be done to change it. Still, it's certainly worth repeating that the primary election ballots mailed out in recent weeks contain the power to truly impact our lives. While the presidential election seems to drive more participation, it isn't the nation's executive office that determines how much you pay for utilities, when roads are repaired and the amount of local taxes levied on your property. The Chronicle will conclude its primary election previews this week with a look at the Tenino mayoral race. Previous stories can be found online at www.chronline.com. Ballots must be postmarked by Aug. 4 or returned to a drop-box by 8 p.m. on election day. THE VETERANS Memorial Museum has been the subject of praise since its creation nearly 20 years ago. Over the weekend, visitors to the annual Civil War reenactments on Tune Road south of Chehalis were provided with all the more reason to recognize the museum for its vast positive impact on our community. Hundreds attended the event, which featured a reenactment of the surrender of Confederate troops. The sights and pageantry might distract many from recognizing that the event fits well within the mission of the museum. "Our mission is to honor veterans. There are no living veterans of the Civil War," Executive Director Chip Duncan said. "Once you have veterans passing away, that part of history is relegated to the history books..." "By them re-enacting it, it's helping bring to the limelight and the general understanding of the American people what actually happened. It's the best way to remember them right now." The best way to support those dedicated to honoring veterans is to continue supporting the museum, which is located at 100 SW Veterans Way in Chehalis. The museum is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. year round. During the summer, it is also open from 1 to 5 p.m. on Sundays. Call (360) 740-8875 for details on how you can play a role in helping the museum continue to accomplish its important mission.

Aerospace Scholars Plan a Mission to Mars

Have you ever thought about flying to Mars? Well, 93 Washington Aerospace Scholars who could help make that happen gathered at the Museum of Flight in Seattle this summer for week-long residency sessions. Their assignment: Plan a mission to Mars. "Theirs is the generation that will make the vision of human space exploration a reality," said Melissa Edwards, director of Washington Aerospace Scholars. The program, divided into three week-long sessions, aims to inspire incoming high school seniors to better understand the jobs of engineers and scientists.

By Julie McDonald

One of those students was my 17-year-old niece from Olympia, Rose McDonald, who sat in the room the first day when a young man entered and asked, "Is this nerd camp?" Another was Nate Birchard, 17, son of Dr. Keith and Cecilia Birchard, of Chehalis, who participated during the residency's second week (only four days after a three-week trip to Europe with 36 other W.F. West High School students and 10 adult chaperones). "My favorite part was the engineering challenges," he said. Every evening, the teams tackled challenges, such as creating and launching a rocket and building remote-controlled rovers. Students who applied for the program last fall enrolled in a 12-week course through the Museum of Flight and University of Washington, for which they could receive five college credits. In addition to their regular schoolwork, they completed reading assignments and submitted homework every two weeks, which high school teachers who serve as chaperones during the residency graded. Those who completed the course participated in the residency. Planning their mission to Mars, students were randomly divided into four teams: Gray focused on integrating all parts of the mission, including crew selection. Red researched how to propel the spacecraft to Mars and back to Earth. White developed plans for living habitats to sustain the crew. Blue investigated how the crew could work on Mars. Nate served on the red team; Rose on the blue. Both said they enjoyed meeting new people. "We left the hotel at 7:30 each morning and were not back till 9:45 or 10," Nate said. "It was a busy week but lots of fun." In addition to conducting research, the students toured Boeing Co.'s plant at Everett and Aerojet Rocketdyne in Redmond, which developed the propulsion system that sent a spacecraft to Pluto nine years ago. Adult mentors from Boeing worked with each team, and scientists and engineers spoke to the students throughout the week. The final luncheon speaker for Nate's session was Dorothy Marie "Dottie" Metcalf-Lindenburger, a teacher and former astronaut who flew missions to the International Space Station. "I'd love to work for NASA someday on programs like their upcoming mission to Mars, or at Boeing," Nate said. "This program was a real neat opportunity to look inside how both those operations work." On Friday, I attended a luncheon with my sister, Rose's mom, where speakers included Roger Myers, executive director of Advanced In-Space Programs at Aerojet Rocketdyne. He outlined three phases of upcoming space development: redirecting an asteroid to orbit the moon to prove long-term crew survival in space, establishing crew habitats on the Martian moon Phobos and landing on the surface of Mars. "I'm not sure if I want to go there," Nate said, "but it would be neat to help people get there."

Since the program started in 2006, more than 2,100 students have participated in the online distance learning and 1,260 completed the summer residency. For information, see the website at <http://www.museumofflight.org/was>. The flight museum's science, technology, engineering and math programs are likely to increase with Thursday's announcement of a $30 million donation from the family of the late Bill Boeing Jr., half of which will create the Boeing Academy for STEM Learning.

Capital Gains Tax Would Affect Few People

Ruth Peterson, Sen. John Braun's legislative aide, called into John Panesko's show to rebut my letter rebutting her letter claiming that the capital gains tax would hurt more than just the wealthy. She knows Panesko won't let me call into his show because neither he nor Peterson could ever beat me in a debate in a public forum where Panesko doesn't control the microphone. Panesko tried to make it sound like I was attacking Peterson personally. I am not attacking her personally. She is not an extremist like the Tea Party. She is a mainstream Republican. Republicans always support the rich, while Democrats fight for the poor and middle class. Peterson focused on the bill the governor and Democratic House wanted to pass taxing capital gains on over $25,000 for individuals and $50,000 for couples. She still complained that farmers and contractors who sold off property for their retirement would be subject to the tax. But she didn't tell her audience that the tax only would apply to only the top five-tenths of 1 percent of residents, or about 32,000 people. Peterson downplayed my claim that if a couple sold a rental property for $100,000 they would have to pay a mere $2,500 capital gains tax, with $97,500 left over. She argued that if she lived 20 years after retiring, and her pension was only $1,800 a month, multiplying that by 20 years, that would be only $432,000. But I say, if you divided that same $2,500 by 20 years, that would be the paltry sum of $125 a year, hardly a pimple on a flea's butt. Peterson went on to admit that agricultural land must be actively farmed to be exempt from the capital gains tax but complained that it won't be exempt if it is not actively farmed. I agree that if the land is not actively farmed, it should be subject to the capital gains tax, just like any other property. Everybody knows Panesko's show is a safe haven for right-wing, anti-government propagandists, no matter how ridiculous their claims. You have to keep in mind that Panesko and Peterson would never get away with such propaganda if we had a real Democratic Party in Lewis County. The Lewis County Democratic Party is dead under chairwoman Carol Brock. One time Brock threw a tissy fit and told me to leave for merely mentioning Panesko and The Chronicle. Yeah, she really did that. Naturally, I refused to leave, so she adjourned the meeting. Yeah, she really did that too. Then her first lieutenant, Brian Dow, made a motion not to allow me to mention The Chronicle or Panesko. Yeah, he really did that. Of course, I never let that one go anywhere either. But this is what the Central Committee is made up of. The Lewis County Democratic Party is in the worst shape it's ever been in. Don't waste your time and money on the Lewis County Democratic Party. Brock should resign before she does any more damage.

country that leads the world in many areas, including morally, with this disgusting redefinition of marriage. Biblical truth was used by our Forefathers as a benchmark when considering laws affecting the moral health of our nation. Though not all Christians, the founding fathers and lawmakers realized that liberty needed boundaries/parameters regarding behavior — remove those landmarks at your peril. The moral sin in America is a symptom of the root problem (Romans 1:18-22; Ezekiel 16:49). Wicked (Genesis 13:13), and effeminate (I Corinthians 6:9-10) men have stolen God's rainbow as proof of his promise to mankind in Genesis 9:12-13 and now use it as a banner to flaunt their sin. They are propagating a "lifestyle" that is condemned in the Word of God above all others (Romans 1:24, 25, 28). Becoming secular and moving away from the knowledge of God, America may find that this Supreme Court decision will hasten our path to ruin (Ezekiel 18:30).

Pool Provided Venue to Learn Valuable Skill

Each summer for 15 years I sat on the bleachers at the Pearl Street Pool in Centralia to monitor the progress of my children as they learned to swim. One of them went on to take life-saving training and became a lifeguard at the pool in 1970. I never had an opportunity to learn to swim, but I believe it is a skill every child should have. I am thankful the state is offering to help Centralia make this possible again.

Gasoline Tax Climbing 7 Cents This Week

PAYING MORE: By Next Summer, Washington Will Have the Second-Highest Rate in the Country

By Jerry Cornfield
The Herald

OLYMPIA — The state's gas tax will climb this week and by next summer will be the second-highest rate in the nation.

It will rise 7 cents a gallon Saturday and another 4.9 cents July 1, 2016. The two-step increase will help pay for billions of dollars in improvements in the state's transportation system.

Supporters say boosting the state's gas tax will be worth it because those dollars will pay for much needed new roads, bridges and bike paths and expanded bus service throughout Washington.

It is the largest source of money for the state's plan to make $16 billion of improvements in its transportation system in the next 16 years.

"I think people will notice (the increase). I think people driving in congestion are not going to like it but will appreciate where

"By the time the gas reaches the gas station, the tax has been paid."

Tony Sermonti
state Department of Licensing

it is going," said Rep. Judy Clibborn, D-Mercer Island, chairwoman of the House Transportation Committee and a leading architect of the final package.

Sen. Steve Hobbs, D-Lake Stevens, one of a handful of lawmakers involved in the intricate negotiations, said there will be many benefits in his district.

"For us, for example, we're getting a new intersection that everybody in Lake Stevens knows we have to do and that is at Frontier Village," he said. And there's money to construct a new bridge over the Snohomish River and deal with issues surrounding 35th Avenue in Mill Creek, he said.

Lawmakers who opposed the gas tax hike differed in their reasons. Some simply vote against any tax hike and others believe this double-digit increase would hit the pocketbooks of the working poor harder than other economic classes.

And some, like freshman Rep. Mark Harmsworth, R-Mill Creek, said he wanted the measure put in front of voters to make the final decision.

"I don't have any issue with the projects. A lot of the projects are great," said Harmsworth who, like Hobbs, represents the 44th Legislative District in central Snohomish County. "This is a large increase, and I wanted to get their approval before we do it."

Today, the state's gas tax is 37.5 cents a gallon. On Aug. 1, it will go up 7 cents to 44.5 cents. That will put Washington ahead of California (42.35 cents) and behind only Pennsylvania (51.6 cents), New York (45.9) and Hawaii (45.1), based on figures compiled for July by the American Petroleum Institute.

Next summer, Washington's rate will climb to 49.4 cents per gallon. Barring action by any other states, this would leave Washington with the second highest gas tax in the nation behind Pennsylvania.

The 11.9-cent increase is the chief source of new revenue for the state's multi-year transportation package. But money also is generated from increasing vehicle registration fees by $15 to $35 a year, depending on the weight of the vehicle. There also is a new $5 fee on each studded tire sold in the state.

Under the plan, an estimated $8.8 billion will be spent on state and local road projects, $1.4 billion on maintaining existing highways and nearly $1 billion for multimodal projects including buses, bike paths and pedestrian walkways.

The package also clears the way for Community Transit and Sound Transit to ask voters to approve new or higher taxes in order to expand their respective services.

Community Transit leaders already agreed to ask voters in November to raise the sales tax to fund services. Sound Transit is looking to ask voters in November 2016 for authority to raise $15 billion for a system expansion into Everett and Tacoma.

The state package contains roughly $670 million allotted for road, transit and ferry projects in Snohomish County.

While the gas tax will go up 7 cents Saturday, it's hard to predict what drivers will encounter if they fill up their tanks this weekend.

In Washington, the gas tax isn't paid at the pump. Rather since 1999, the state has collected fuel taxes at the point of distribution. This means fuel wholesalers pay it at the time they make their purchases from distributors. This is commonly known as "tax at the rack."

"By the time the gas reaches the gas station, the tax has been paid," explained Tony Sermonti of the state Department of Licensing.

And given the constant fluctuation in gas prices, a bump up of a penny or two won't be surprising.

"I think people will see it but I don't know if they'll notice it because they are always going up and down," Clibborn said.

Centralia College Receives $1.6 Million Federal Grant to Extend TRiO Student Support Services

By The Chronicle

The U.S. Department of Education recently announced it has awarded Centralia College $1.6 million to support TRiO Student Support Services.

The money will be received over five years to help the support services, which focuses on first-generation, low-income and disabled college students.

"These funds allow Centralia College to provide critical support for students who might not be able to graduate and pursue their dreams without these additional services," Centralia College President Robert Frost said in a press release. "Our TRiO staff has been incredibly successful in helping these students earn degrees, continue in higher education, and transform their lives."

The grant was awarded after a highly competitive, nationwide application process and will provide personalized academic advising, tutoring, transfer and career planning, mentoring and specialized workshops and activities for up to 220 students annually.

Liisa Preslan, TRiO director at Centralia College, explained the mission of TRiO is to help students stay enrolled, succeed in their classes and graduate with a certificate or associate degree, or transfer to a four-year college or university.

"Sometimes young people need a helping hand to tap into their full potential, and Centralia College offers that help to our community through the TRiO program," Rep. Jaime Herrera Beutler, R-Wash., said. "I want to congratulate Centralia College on receiving this federal grant to empower individuals — those who are either living with disabilities, coming from low-income circumstances, first-generation college students or overcoming other challenges — and achieve and sustain successful lives."

TRiO Student Support Services assisted 241 students in the 2013-14 academic year at Centralia College. Of those, 63 percent graduated and 56 percent transferred to a four-year college. Overall, 86 percent of TRiO participants stayed in college from one year to the next.

"Winning a $1.6 million dollar grant to fund these services for the next five years is a huge accomplishment, and speaks volumes about the talented people working in the TRiO program," Robert Cox, vice president of Student Services, said.

For more information on TRiO programs, call (360) 736-9391, ext. 201 or visit www.centralia.edu/students/TRiO.

Centralia Man Injured After Vehicle Crashes, Catches Fire on Interstate 5

By The Chronicle

A 55-year-old Centralia man was injured after a fiery crash on Interstate 5 Saturday evening in Cowlitz County.

The man was driving a 2005 Buick LaSalle southbound on I-5 north of Woodland when the vehicle left the road to the right, traveled down an embankment and caught fire, according to the Washington State Patrol.

The man was transported to Legacy Emanuel Hospital in Portland. The vehicle was totaled.

It is unknown whether drugs or alcohol played a role in the crash, according to the State Patrol. The incident is under investigation.

Centralia Ballet Academy Decides on Different Location

By The Chronicle

In June, owners of the Centralia Ballet Academy announced their goal to purchase a downtown Centralia property to move their studio to, but after a change of plans, the company will be moving elsewhere instead.

Originally Mick and Nancy Gunter wanted to purchase a building located at 109 N. Tower Ave. in Centralia, across from the Olympic Club. The building is the oldest one standing in downtown and was built in 1892.

After being unable to secure the building, the owners will now move the studio to the Bethel Downtown Centralia Church Building.

The Gunters said the academy had reached an agreement with the newly founded School of the Arts, which will reside in the Bethel building. The couple will lease the building and work in partnership with the school as the resident dance school.

"This is a huge opportunity for CBA and we are excited to be a part of this exciting new program," the Gunters said in an email.

The area will provide the academy with more space and will consist of two studio spaces, one of which is larger than the old studio. A dressing space, waiting areas, office and storage space will also be available.

A receptionist will be on hand to help students of the Centralia Ballet Academy and the School of the Arts during after school hours.

A small theater located in the middle of the building will provide an option for smaller performances to be held after it is renovated.

"We will also be in close proximity to voice, instrumental and drama teachers, which may allow for collaborations and could also be convenient for students wishing to take dance and other arts classes," said the email.

The philosophies and curriculum of the academy will remain unchanged, but the new space will allow the company to offer more to its students.

The Centralia Ballet Academy will be at a temporary location for rehearsals the rest of the summer at 416 N. Tower Ave. in Centralia at the Hub City Mission, across the street from the Bethel church. The space will be located upstairs and provides an opportunity for renovations to be completed this fall.

The academy's fall classes will start Sept. 14 and the 2015-16 schedule is being finalized.

The dance academy started six years ago with about 15 students, and has grown in recent years to approximately 80 students.

Entrants Sought for SWW Fair Talent Show

By The Chronicle

The Southwest Washington Fair is looking for participants for its Stars of Tomorrow talent show, which will be held at noon Aug. 23 on Stage South during the fair.

Up to 15 contestants, in three age groups, will compete for cash prizes at the show.

The talent show is open to all ages 6 and older. Individuals and groups are welcome to compete. The three age divisions are junior, teen and adult.

This contest is open to amateurs only. An application to participate is available at the fair office or online at www.southwestwashingtonfair.net or at the Southwest Washington Fair office.

Applications for the talent show must be returned to the fair office by 5 p.m. Friday. Auditions will be held at 6 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 4, on Stage South. At the fair time show, contestants will be judged by a three-person panel.

A first-place cash prize of $100, a second-place cash prize of $50 and a third-place cash prize of $25 will be awarded in each age division at the end of the show.

This annual fair event is sponsored in part by TwinStar Credit Union.

For more information, contact the Southwest Washington Fair office, (360) 740-1495.

JAY (ROLAND JAY) WINTER

January 17, 1946 - July 19, 2015

Jay Winter, loving husband, father, brother, grandfather, uncle and friend passed away in Vancouver, Washington Sunday, July 19, 2015, surrounded by loved ones.

Born to Arnet and Ruby Winter in Huron, South Dakota, Jay was the second of four children. Raised on the family farm in the Wessington Hills, he loved sunshine and wide-open spaces, riding his horses while playing cowboys and Indians with his brothers, cousins and friends. He attended Wessington Springs High School, a Christian boarding school and Central Christian College in McPherson, Kansas, where he made many life-long friends.

Jay served in the U.S. Army and National Guard during the Vietnam and Pueblo Crisis era (1966 – 1971). In 1969, he moved to Centralia, Washington and began a 15 year career in law enforcement, becoming police chief the last five years. While in the police department, Jay completed a bachelor of science degree in public administration. His entire career was spent in law enforcement, as a Lewis County Commissioner, with Washington Counties Risk Pool and as Walla Walla County Personnel and Risk Manager. He retired in 2012 after 41 years in public service.

Jay was very athletic and enjoyed a variety of sports. He excelled at basketball, tennis, racquetball, softball, water and snow skiing and in recent years, pickle ball. He also refereed pickle ball and basketball games and coached the Centralia girl's High School Junior Varsity basketball team for several years.

A man of many interests, Jay loved car racing and raced go carts, stock cars and later, mini-cups. Watching NASCAR was a favorite hobby and he tried to attend one race every year. Bicycling and motorcycling were also activities he enjoyed with many friends through the years.

An avid reader, Jay's personal library was filled with books on Christian life, Bible studies, leadership, personal growth and police detective novels. He was often in the middle of several books simultaneously and ready for a deep discussion about new ideas or projects he wanted to pursue. He also owned and operated a Christian bookstore, the Commentary, for many years. Jay will always be known and respected for his deep Christian faith, strength of character, honesty, integrity and leading by example.

Jay is survived by his wife, Pamela; daughter, Nicoe (Jerry) King; grandsons, Austin and Alex; son, Chad Winter; granddaughter, Sabaea; stepdaughters, Heidi (Warner) Scott; granddaughters, Casey and Riley; Holly (Justin) Clegg; grandsons, Forrest and Hunter; Heather (Ronnie) Miller; twin grandsons, Reed and Rory; brothers, Jerry (Darlene) Winter and Dan (Bonnie) Winter; sister, Pam (Mike) Smith; and numerous nieces and nephews.

He was preceded in death by his parents, Arnet and Ruby Winter; and former wife, Janice Draper Winter.

A celebration of life will be held at 3:00 p.m., Aug. 2, 2015, at Liberty Bible Nazarene Church, 12401 NE Salmon Creek Ave, Vancouver, WA 98686. A private graveside will be held at a later date at Willamette National Cemetery in Portland.

Memorial contributions may be made in Jay's name to Danner Farms Mentoring Project, 1900 S. Main St., Milton-Freewater, OR 97862.

Museum presented the re-enactments in partnership with the nonprofit Washington Civil War Association, which brought about 800 re-enactors to Chehalis over the weekend. The group reenacted battles four times in the weekend.

"By them re-enacting it, it's helping bring to the limelight and the general understanding of the American people what actually happened," Duncan said. "It's the best way to remember them right now."

On Saturday and Sunday, visitors drove up to the site, less than a mile from Interstate 5, parked their cars in a field, and stepped out of modern times into 1865.

"They're trying to create an image of what it was like in 1865," Duncan said.

The re-enactors stay in costume and character for the entire weekend, making their lives as historically accurate as possible for a few days.

Scott Middleton, who portrayed Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee at the re-enactment of the surrender at Appomattox Saturday and Sunday, said this was his first time taking part in a Civil War re-enactment. He said he was amazed at the re-enactors' dedication to historical accuracy. "You don't stop learning," he said. "It's just amazing."

The re-enactments are historically accurate to a point, but it's impossible to know exactly what happened at any moment on the battlefield, Duncan said. It's also impossible to re-enact something exactly as it happened when you're at a different location than the actual battle, he said.

This gives the re-enactors a chance to be creative, he said.

"Once the shooting starts ... it kind of takes on a life of its own," he said.

Don McConnell, who played Union Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, started participating in re-enactments after he retired as an officer in the U.S. Army.

"It gets in your blood," he said.

"The Civil War in many respects is with us today."

Some re-enactors, like Middleton, are new to the experience. Others have been replaying battles in the Civil War for decades.

"There's a lot of reasons why people get into it — sometimes it's just to get on a battlefield," Duncan said. "Mostly it's for educational purposes ... and to help us to remember exactly what happened in our national history."

The re-enactors don't all fight in the battles. Many played behind-the-scenes roles as family members of soldiers, shopkeepers or battlefield musicians.

Michie was dressed in period attire and acted as a wife of a Union army major. However, in other battles she switches sides and plays a southerner.

She's not the only re-enactor who switches sides from time to time — even during the same battle.

"There'll be times when we go into the woods, change uniforms, and the public never knows," said Bob Watzte, an Oregon resident who said he has participated in re-enactments for 14 years, along with his daughter.

Barbara Smith started participating in re-enactments 17 years ago.

"You see lots of gray hair around here — a lot of people who have been doing it a long time," she said.

While some women re-enactors play traditional roles, others climb on horses or fire cannons with the men, like Luana Elliott.

"I just like to fight and defend," she said. "I've always been a tomboy."

While some organizations frown on women playing men's roles in re-enactments, it's not without precedent. Some plucky women snuck onto the battlefield and fought alongside men in the Civil War.

"There was one lady who wasn't found out until she was in the old soldier's home," said re-enactor Don Benson.

Duncan said watching a physical representation of the battles in real time — rather than reading about them — makes it easier to understand the nuances of the Civil War.

"The tactics are napoleonic tactics — standing shoulder to shoulder, firing volley after volley," Duncan said.

While those tactics were effective in the days of smooth-bore guns, which were not very accurate over long distances, they were devastating when combined with the more accurate and powerful rifles used in the Civil War.

"It was a really brutal war that we had never seen before," Duncan said. "The amount of casualties in the American Civil War is still greater than anything we have combined."

Watching the battles unfold underscores those horrors, he said.

Last year, re-enactors portrayed the 1864 battle of Petersburg in Chehalis — a particularly deadly and brutal battle fought in trenches.

"It made my hair stand on end," he said. "Right at the end of the battle ... it was just this sea of bodies. It gives you a physical understanding."

Cyclists

across Mossyrock Dam as part of three scenic cycling routes around Mossyrock.

"I think we have perfect roads for it in the Mossyrock area. They're very rural with very little traffic. The roads are in good shape. I think that makes for a nice ride," said Peggy Schwartz, a Mossyrock resident and avid cyclist who spearheaded the bike event.

On Sunday morning, participants will have the opportunity to ride on a 10-, 30- or 70-mile route past Riffe Lake, Mayfield

Lake and Swofford Pond. Cyclists will also be checked on by support vehicles and have the chance to take a break at rest stops along the way.

Schwartz said some people were curious as to why there wasn't a 100-mile ride as part of the offering. Her reasoning is the hilly nature of the Mossyrock area more than compensates for the lack of mileage.

"There's quite a bit of elevation gain on the 70, over 4,000 feet. I feel that compensated for the short distance. You can't cycle at Mossyrock without the hills," she said.

Cyclists will start in the parking lot at Mossyrock Dam just off of U.S. Highway 12.

She said the roads will offer nice rides because they're so rural and have minimal traffic. Even her friends from the neighboring big cities can't believe how nice the routes are, she added. Schwartz said around 50 people signed up in advance to be in the race, but she anticipates more will come on the day of. She attributes the low early turnout to it being the first year of the ride, and competition from other regional riding events that have been announced much earlier.

"Cyclists like to schedule ahead," she said.

The ride is free for children under 18. Preteens tend to be signing up for the 10-mile ride and teens are mostly participating in the 30-mile route. The more competitive or experienced riders are doing the 70-mile route.

One of the Blueberry Festival's coordinators, Phillip McDaniel, said the bike rides were added to the stable of events as a way to attract more attention to the festival from people in other communities. Currently the festival attracts around 6,000 people, but he hopes that events like the bike ride raise the events profile and attract more people to Mossyrock.

"The festival can't just be supported by the locals, we have to bring in the outsiders," he said.

Dam

The intended audience is county planners and local officials who are refining comprehensive plans and zoning, transportation departments and industry leaders. Although Lewis County has a maximum possible amount of sand and gravel estimated at 2.35 billion tons, only 60.6 million tons are currently permitted. The report says if only the permitted amounts of sand and gravel are consumed they'll expire in 2024. The bedrock alone would last until 2049.

The supply of currently permitted sand, gravel and bedrock should last until 2060. However, the report lists a proposed dam to control flooding and possibly protect fish habitat on the Chehalis River at Pe Ell would deplete nearly all of the sand and gravel in the county if it were built using sand and gravel. However, officials involved with the proposed dam say that statement is a bit misleading.

"The bottom line is the statement in the report is not correct insofar as the dam isn't proposing to use sand and gravel resources," said Bob Montgomery, principal engineer with Anchor QEA, an environmental engineering and consulting firm.

Including the dam, the report gave other reasons the county could run out of sand and gravel before then. They included Interstate 5 maintenance, and the possibility materials could be unrecoverable because of environmental issues or economic costs.

While examining the possibility of constructing a dam, engineers considered a variety of materials to build it. One of the options considered was sand and gravel, but Montgomery said it was ruled out because it would be the most expensive option of them all. If anything, it was a fallback option, he said.

"What we've pretty much confirmed is that we wouldn't use the sand and gravel because of costs. We'd be using basalt," Montgomery said.

The closest sand and gravel deposits to the dam are just north of Centralia. However, there are large deposits of basalt in four different areas close to the proposed dam that could be excavated.

"Basalt is ubiquitous in that area and there's nobody around there, you'd never run out," Montgomery said. "They weren't looking at the whole other source of material, which is probably almost limitless."

Dave Norman, a geologist and manager of geology and Earth division of the DNR, said the information could be mischaracterized. He said he is aware the dam would likely be built with basalt or other crushed rock. The line in the report was highlighting what would happen if it were built out of sand and gravel.

"This map was intended as a planning tool. ... It's a planning document for the long-term future of the county to maintain roads. It wasn't done with thinking much about the dam," he said. "The dam is a variable and there's ways around it for rock resources to meet the need for building it."

Nation in Brief

Few Clues Emerge on Fate of Teens Missing on Fishing Trip

JUPITER, Fla. (AP) — Rescuers endured a fourth night of an anxious search for two young Floridians born and bred as boaters who went missing on the high seas.

The Coast Guard scoured an area the size of West Virginia with no sign of the boaters by early today. Petty Officer Anthony Soto said today that the search area remains 50 miles off the coast of Jacksonville and expands as far north as Savannah, Georgia, and as far south as Cape Canaveral.

The 14-year-old boys' vessel was found capsized on Sunday morning. But relatives and friends of the teens were clinging to hope that the expertise they acquired boating and fishing in their short lives was enough to keep them alive while apparently lost in the Atlantic.

"This isn't something that he's new at," said Carly Black, the mother of Austin Stephanos, in an interview with television station WPBF. "I think they feel better on the boat than they do on land."

Prison Worker Accused of Helping Killers Escape Due in Court

PLATTSBURGH, N.Y. (AP) — A northern New York prison worker accused of smuggling hacksaw blades in frozen hamburger meat to two killers who later broke out and spent more than two weeks on the run is due in court today for arraignment.

Joyce Mitchell, a tailor shop instructor at Clinton Correctional Facility, was jailed shortly after the elaborately staged June 6 escape of Richard Matt and David Sweat. Matt was shot and killed by searchers June 26, about 30 miles west of the prison; Sweat was captured near the Canadian border two days later and sent to another prison.

Mitchell is accused of providing hacksaw blades, chisels, a punch tool and a screwdriver to Matt.

Man Killed by Escort Possibly Linked to Missing Women

CHARLESTON, West Virginia (AP) — A man killed by an escort he met online is being investigated for possible links to the unsolved disappearances or slayings of women nationwide, authorities said.

Neal Falls, of Springfield, Oregon, was carrying axes, a shovel and bleach when he was killed July 18, and authorities said Monday he had been stopped, interviewed or investigated by police in at least 20 states.

Police say Falls was fatally shot as he attacked and choked the escort in Charleston, West Virginia, and she grabbed his handgun off the ground and fired it.

Police found axes, knives, handcuffs, a shovel, bleach and other items in Falls' car, raising suspicions this wasn't the first time he had attacked a woman.

NSA Will Stop Looking at Old US Phone Records

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Obama administration has decided that the National Security Agency will soon stop examining — and will ultimately destroy — millions of American calling records it collected under a controversial program leaked by former agency contractor Edward Snowden.

When Congress passed a law in June ending the NSA's bulk collection of American calling records after a six-month transition, officials said they weren't sure whether they would continue to make use of the records that had already been collected, which generally go back five years. Typically, intelligence agencies are extremely reluctant to part with data they consider lawfully obtained.

Boy Scouts to Allow Gay Adult Leaders

By David Crary
AP National Writer

NEW YORK — The Boy Scouts of America has ended its blanket ban on gay adult leaders but will allow church-sponsored Scout units to maintain the exclusion for religious reasons.

The new policy, aimed at easing a controversy that has embroiled the Boy Scouts for years, takes effect immediately. It was approved Monday by the BSA's National Executive Board on a 45-12 vote during a closed-to-the-media teleconference.

"For far too long this issue has divided and distracted us," the BSA's president, former Defense Secretary Robert Gates, said. "Now it's time to unite behind our shared belief in the extraordinary power of Scouting to be a force for good."

Initial reactions to the decision from groups on both sides suggested the issue would remain divisive.

The Mormon church, which sponsors more Scout units than any other organization, said it is "deeply troubled" by the decision. Church officials suggested they would look into the possibility of forming their own organization to replace Boy Scouts.

"The admission of openly gay leaders is inconsistent with the doctrines of the Church and what have traditionally been the values of the Boy Scouts of America," said a statement from Mormon headquarters in Salt

BSA president

Lake City.

In contrast, the Human Rights Campaign, a national LGBT-rights organization, said the Boy Scouts should not allow church-sponsored units to continue excluding gays.

"Discrimination should have no place in the Boy Scouts, period," said the HRC's president, Chad Griffin. "BSA officials should now demonstrate true leadership and begin the process of considering a full national policy of inclusion."

Gates foreshadowed Monday's action on May 21, when he told the Scouts' national meeting that the long-standing ban on participation by openly gay adults was no longer sustainable. He said the ban was likely to be the target of lawsuits that the Scouts likely would lose.

Two weeks ago, the new policy was approved unanimously by the BSA's 17-member National Executive Committee. It would allow local Scout units to select adult leaders without regard to sexual orientation — a stance that several Scout councils have already adopted in defiance of the official national policy.

In 2013, after heated internal debate, the BSA decided to allow openly gay youth as Scouts, but not gay adults as leaders. Several denominations that collectively sponsor close to half of all Scout units — including the Roman Catholic church, the Mormon church and the Southern Baptist Convention — have been apprehensive about ending the ban on gay adults.

The BSA's top leaders pledged to defend the right of any church-sponsored units to continue excluding gays as adult volunteers. But that assurance has not satisfied some conservative church leaders.

"In recent years I have seen a definite cooling on the part of Baptist churches toward the Scouts," said the Rev. Russell Moore, president of the Southern Baptist Convention's Ethics & Religious Liberty Commission. "This will probably bring that cooling to a freeze."

World in Brief

Libya Court Sentences Gadhafi Son to Death for 2011 Killings

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — A court in Libya today sentenced a son of Moammar Gadhafi to death by firing squad after convicting him of murder and inciting genocide during the country's 2011 civil war.

It is unlikely, however, that the sentence against Seif al-Islam Gadhafi will be carried out anytime soon, as a militia in western Libya has refused to hand him over to the government for the past four years.

That uncertainty reflects the chaos still gripping this North African nation split between rival militias and governments while facing an affiliate of the extremist Islamic State group.

The Tripoli court sentenced to death eight others, including former Libyan spy chief Abdullah al-Senoussi, who is in their custody. Also sentenced to death were foreign intelligence chief Abuzed Omar-Dorda and Gadhafi's former Prime Minister Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi.

Malaysian PM Axes Deputy, Attorney General in Fund Scandal

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Malaysian Prime Minister Najib Razak, stung by allegations that he received some $700 million in government money, today fired the attorney general who had been investigating him and a deputy who has been among his most prominent critics.

Najib is under increasing pressure over leaked confidential documents that allegedly show the money, from state investment fund 1MDB, went into his personal accounts.

Najib announced over national television that his deputy Muhyiddin Yassin will be replaced by Ahmad Zahid Hamidi, a Cabinet member who will also retain his home minister portfolio. Earlier today, the government announced it had terminated the services of Attorney General Abdul Gani Patail.

Scientists Worry About Arms Race Using Artificial Intelligence

LONDON (AP) — Scientists and tech experts — including Prof. Stephen Hawking and Apple co-founder Steve Wozniak — warned today of a global arms race with weapons using artificial intelligence.

In an open letter with hundreds of signatories, the experts argued that if any major military power pushes ahead with development of autonomous weapons, "a global arms race is virtually inevitable, and the endpoint of this technological trajectory is obvious: autonomous weapons will become the Kalashnikovs of tomorrow."

Some critics have argued in favor of so-called "killer robots," saying the use of robotics on the battlefield could save lives. Such weapons are still some years away.

But the scientists warned that, unlike nuclear weapons, once they are developed they will require no costly or hard-to-obtain raw materials — making it possible to mass-produce them.

NATO Holding Rare Emergency Meeting at Turkey's Request

BRUSSELS (AP) — NATO declared its "strong solidarity" with Turkey today as ambassadors gathered for a rare emergency meeting about the threat faced by a member.

Turkey requested the extraordinary meeting to gauge the threat the Islamic State extremist group poses to Turkey, and the actions Turkish authorities are taking in response, including attacks on Kurdish rebels.

"We strongly condemn the terrorist attacks against Turkey, and express our condolences to the Turkish government and the families" of victims killed in recent terrorist actions, NATO ambassadors said in a statement after the meeting.

Microsoft to Launch Windows 10 Operating System on Wednesday

By Brandon Bailey
AP Technology Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Microsoft's new Windows 10 operating system debuts Wednesday, as the longtime leader in PC software struggles to carve out a new role in a world where people increasingly rely on smartphones, tablets and information stored online.

No one's expected to line up overnight for Windows 10, the way people did 20 years ago for Windows 95. But Microsoft is counting on tens or even hundreds of millions of people to download its latest release for free in the coming months.

The launch will be accompanied by a global marketing campaign for an event the company hopes will be pivotal — both for its own future and for a vast audience of computer users around the world.

Windows 10 is coming to PCs and tablets first, but it's also designed to run phones, game consoles and even holographic headsets. It has new features, a streamlined Web browser called Edge and a desktop version of Cortana, the online assistant that is Microsoft's answer to Google Now and Apple's Siri.

Still, the company insists Windows 10 will seem familiar to users of Windows 7, the six-year-old operating system still running on most PCs. Microsoft and PC makers want to erase the memory of the last big update, 2012's Windows 8, which alienated many with its jarring, unwieldy design.

Microsoft skipped the name Windows 9, as if to distance itself further from the last release. While many analysts believe Windows 8 made sagging PC sales even worse, it's unclear if Windows 10 will spur the industry back to growth.

Microsoft plans promotional events in several cities Wednesday, tied to a global ad campaign and a series of charitable donations. About 5 million people who enrolled in an earlier test program will be able to download Windows 10 right away.

The company is also offering Windows 10 as a free download, any time over the next year, to anyone who has the Home or Pro versions of Windows 7 or 8 (but not the Enterprise versions used by big organizations).

Some may not get it the first day; Microsoft says it will deliver downloads in waves, to ensure things go smoothly, but it hasn't said how long that will take. Details on how to upgrade are here: <http://bit.ly/1eNCySl>.

State AG Gives Glowing Report to Court on Education

CHECKING IN: Assistant Attorney General Tells State Supreme Court It Should Dissolve Contempt Order Over Education Funding Shortfall

SEATTLE (AP) — The Washington Attorney General's Office said Monday the state has made so much progress toward fully paying the cost of basic education that the state Supreme Court should dissolve its contempt order on education funding.

In a report turned in to the court, Senior Assistant Attorney General David Stolier lists all the ways the Legislature has fulfilled the high court's 2012 McCleary decision on the funding.

It says the state is on schedule to meet all the requirements of the court and no longer needs a contempt order hanging over its work. He says imposing sanctions would slow lawmakers' progress toward fixing the way the state pays for education.

"Any sanction would be counterproductive," Stolier wrote.

The documents were turned in with a report from the Legislature outlining its progress toward responding to the court's McCleary decision. That report outlines the $4.8 billion added to the state education budget since the 2012 ruling and details work that remains and how lawmakers intend to do it.

The lawmakers represented by the attorney general's office and the plaintiffs in the McCleary case are not as enthusiastic about the Legislature's progress as the attorney general's report.

Lawmakers have acknowledged they have not finished their work, mostly because they have not come to an agreement on school compensation reform and ending the state overreliance on local levies to pay the state's education responsibilities.

Attorney Thomas Ahearne wrote for the plaintiffs that it's time for the court to either impose sanctions on the Legislature or acknowledge it wasn't serious about enforcing the rights of school children.

"The time has come for this court to make what some would call a 'fish or cut bait' decision," said Ahearne, who represents a coalition of teachers, parents and community groups that sued the state over education funding.

He said it would be cheaper and easier to continue to violate the constitutional rights of the 1 million school children in the state. But he asks the Supreme Court to instead choose to be a separate and independent branch of state government.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Randy Dorn also sent a brief to the state Supreme Court on Monday, calling on the court to take firm action on behalf of school children.

News in Brief

Washington State Patrol Considers Larger Academy Class Size

SHELTON (AP) — The Washington State Patrol is considering an increase in class sizes at the academy in Shelton to combat a shortage of troopers.

KING-TV reported that there are 95 open trooper positions across the state and about 200 troopers will be eligible to retire in the next two to three years.

The State Patrol hopes at least 60 cadets will take part in the 33-week training academy in the next several months.

Recruiting Lt. Tim Coley says troopers are not the only agency hurting, with about 500 police officer vacancies at agencies throughout Washington. WSP officials say they expect extra recruiting efforts to extend for the next two years. The next class at the academy starts in November.

Seattle, Tacoma and Everett Ask People to Conserve Water

SEATTLE (AP) — The cities of Seattle, Tacoma and Everett are asking people to avoid wasting water in response to the hot, dry weather and low river levels.

KING-5 reported that Seattle and Everett say their water outlook is "fair" and the municipalities should have enough water into fall when rainfall typically replenishes the supply. Seattle's water supply covers the city along with 25 other cities and water districts in King County. Everett's water supply serves 80 percent of Snohomish County.

Tacoma says its use of the Green River for summer water demands is being augmented with groundwater wells.

Tacoma's water supply serves Tacoma and several surrounding communities in Pierce and King counties. The three cities are urging customers to take steps to avoid wasting water, including watering lawns before 8 a.m. or after 7 p.m. to reduce evaporation and to use full loads in washing machines.

True-Crime Author Ann Rule Dies at Age 83

SEATTLE (AP) — True-crime writer Ann Rule, who wrote more than 30 books, including a profile of her former co-worker, serial killer Ted Bundy, has died at age 83.

Rule died at Highline Medical Center at 10:30 p.m. Sunday, said Scott Thompson, a spokesman for CHI Franciscan Health. Rule's daughter, Leslie Rule, said on Facebook that her mother had many health issues, including congestive heart failure.

Ann Rule's first book, "The Stranger Beside Me," profiled Bundy, whom she got to know while sharing the late shift at a Seattle suicide hotline. She has said she had a contract to write about an unknown serial killer before her co-worker was charged with the crimes.

Rule wrote about the case surrounding the death of Toledo woman Ronda Reynolds in her 2010 book "In the Still of the Night: The Strange Death of Ronda Reynolds and Her Mother's Unceasing Quest for the Truth."

Voice of the People

Chronicle readers share their thoughts every day through social media, including Facebook, Twitter and the comment section of Chronline.com. Here are some of the recent highlights of conversation.

Readers respond on Facebook to death of true crime author Ann Rule:

Barbara Nichols Lewis: Ann Rule was one of my favorite authors. It's truly horrifying to read of the treatment of her sons against her in the final stages of her life.

Barbara Martin: So sorry to hear this. Thanks to Ann Rule there was some justice brought to the mother of Ronda Reynolds.

Bethany Weaver Spalding: Met her once. Very real down to earth person who cared about what she wrote.

Marla Isaacs Bock: There was some news coverage about her children stealing her money. She was a very good writer and I liked her books.

Debra Lee Curtright Mitchell: Saw her at the college. Have her signature in my Ronda Reynolds book. Was great to get to meet her and speak to her.

Readers respond on Facebook following an apology for comments by Centralia City Councilor John Elmore, who raised the ire of many with a statement about the Pearl Street Pool:

Jamie Muir: You have to hold those ideas as truths in order for them to come out so easily. I live by the standard, don't tell me, show me. If Mr. Elmore truly cares about the families and youth of our city, prove it in official actions that support them. In other words, put up or shut up.

Cindy Christensen Walsh: His statement was taken out of context. I'm thinking the Chronicle is being ridiculous for continuing on this. Let it go and move on. John is an outstanding individual.

Amanda Baker McDougall: Taken out of context how? I'd love to hear what context makes that statement less offensive.

Clubs

Photograph submitted by Alice Coakley, Oakview Grange

Orion Schroeder, of the Oakview Grange, took both Best of Show and Second Best of Show in the Junior Division of a Grange photo contest.

Oakview Grange

Oakview Grange members had a total of eight entries in various Grange contests — from candy making to writing as well as photography and the Heritage Trail Quilt Block contest.

Orion Schroeder took Best of Show and Second Best of Show on two of his photographs in the Junior Division.

In other activities, Oakview members turned in 15 pounds of canceled stamps, and 45 items were donated to the Washington State Grange Youth Department's "Keep Washington Warm" project. All the items collected at State Grange will be divided and given away to needy children in the host county and surrounding counties.

The four specialty baskets created by members were auctioned off, raising over $120 for the Family Living and Lecturer departments.

Members continue with upgrades and repairs to the hall.

Volunteering

Looking for local volunteer opportunities that align with your interests?

United Way of Lewis County's online Volunteer Center has your answer.

Visit www.volunteerlewis.org today and make an impact on the issues you are most passionate about.

Featured Volunteer Opportunities

- Here is this week's volunteer opportunities:

- Possibilities Pregnancy Center is looking for volunteers to sort and clean items donated to their Care Closet and to keep it looking nice.

- Pope's Kids Place is seeking individuals to assist the event coordinator during the annual Concert on the Green event. Activities include putting up posters, selling tickets and helping with organization.

- Health and Hope Medical Outreach is looking for an English to Spanish translator. Certificate not required. Responsible for assisting other volunteer staff in translating.

The effort to clean the hall and inventory its contents continues. Fire Marshal Rick Mack inspected the hall and made a few recommendations for improvement.

The Southwest Washington Fair theme for 2015 is "Fair in Full Bloom." Members hope to be able to enter a contemporary booth once again. The unseasonably hot weather has taken its toll on many of the flowers.

At the last meeting, members added bookplates to the 144 dictionaries awaiting distribution this fall to third-graders at Jefferson-Lincoln Elementary. This is part of the nationwide Words for Thirds Dictionary Project. This is just one of community service projects that Oakview members are engaged in.

Oakview Grange will once again host their fall rummage sale, to be held 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Oct. 2 and 3. Coffee and lunch will be available. The Grange is hoping to have a craft fair Nov. 6 and 7 as well. Tables will rent for $10 per day.

Washington Counties Struggle With Criminal Justice Costs

SHORTAGE: Local Governments Get Creative to Fund Prosecutions

SEATTLE (AP) — Washington state's 39 counties are draining their budgets trying to keep their communities safe and when they have to prosecute a big murder case some fear they'll end up bankrupt.

Counties large and small are either getting creative with the way they support their criminal justice system or petitioning the state for help to pay for police, lawyers, court personnel and other costs.

The Okanogan County jail, for example, holds 182 inmates but only has an annual budget of $3 million, county administrator Nanette Kallunki told the state in a petition seeking reimbursement for the almost $284,000 it spent prosecuting in 2009 and 2010 a woman and the two people she hired to kill her husband's mistress and their unborn child.

"To save cost, volunteers collect free food from various outlet sources so we can provide meals to inmates for a fraction of the cost," Kallunki said.

Counties spend about $120 million annually just to cover the cost of indigent defense for a variety of felony crimes, and they may get $5 million back from the state, said Eric Johnson, executive director of the Washington State Association of Counties.

And counties have spent more than $23.2 million in the past five years investigating and prosecuting people charged with aggravated murder — a killing involving multiple victims or some other aggravating circumstance, according to an Associated Press review of petitions filed since 2010 under the extraordinary criminal justice law.

In this Jan. 20 photo, officers from the King County Jail lead Joseph McEnroe, left, into King County Superior Court in Seattle for opening statements in his aggravated murder trial. The costs of trying defendants like McEnroe, who was convicted in May in the slayings of his then-girlfriend's family, are putting increased pressures on county budgets.

The law lets counties ask for reimbursement for funds they spent on the investigation, prosecution, indigent defense, jury and other costs in complex murder cases.

"The aggravated murder cases definitely present a hardship for a small county such as ours," said Stacie Prada, treasurer for Jefferson County, which asked the state for $217,914 in 2010 for a double-murder case and $246,000 in 2014 to retry the defendant after an appeals court overturned his conviction.

Jim Jones, Clallam County administrator, said during his nine-plus years at his post, they have applied for and received state funds twice.

"The state Legislature has rightfully recognized that we and other — especially small counties — could be forced into bankruptcy as a result of the costs involved for a complex, capital murder trial," he said.

Of the $23.2 million requested by all counties, the state has released $3.4 million.

"It's an arbitrary decision," said Rep. Ross Hunter, D-Medina, and chair of the House Ways & Means Committee. "We have to decide if we're going to provide some money to counties who, through no fault of their own, have a big case that overstate Rep. Ross Hunter

whelms their budget."

The bigger concern, Hunter said, is not these "lightning strike" cases, but the structural pressures criminal justice budgets face.

"Counties are being bankrupted because of the growth limit on property taxes," he said, referring to a 2001 initiative that capped increases at 1 percent a year.

About 60 percent or more of a county's budget comes from property taxes, he said.

Brian Enslow, a senior policy director with the Washington State Association of Counties, said revenue grows at 1 percent to 3 percent each year, but costs are rising up to 6 percent annually.

"Every day people are making decisions based on resources," he said. "Prosecutors are making choices about filing or not filing charges."

A rare but complex murder case can drain large portions of a county's criminal justice budget, especially for smaller counties.

The state's largest county, King, has the same problem.

The cost of prosecuting Christopher Monfort — convicted of killing Seattle police Officer Tim Brenton, firebombing police vehicles and trying to kill other officers in 2009 — had reached $5 million by the end of 2014. When his trial costs are totaled, that number will rise dramatically, officials said.

The prosecution of Michelle Anderson and Joseph McEnroe for the killing of her family in Carnation had cost King County $6.1 million by the end of 2014 — $3.1 million for Anderson and $3 million for McEnroe. That doesn't include McEnroe's trial and Anderson's trial has yet to come.

"The legal and financial obligations associated with costly aggravated murder cases significantly impacts King County's ability to provide other public services," budget manager Krista Camenzind said in the 2014 petition.

King County has requested reimbursements of more than $14.3 million since 2010 but only received $187,000.

News in Brief

a suitcase. The other one was found in Kent, Washington, about 3 to 5 miles southeast of SeaTac.

Detectives said a man discovered a suitcase in a park near the Green River Bridge on May 27 and when he opened the suitcase, he found a body tucked inside and called police.

That woman was believed to be between 50 and 60 years old with a small build. She did not have any obvious injuries, and Seo said the King County medical examiner's office was unable to determine cause of death.

Seo said they are treating the SeaTac death as a homicide and are seeking the public's help.

A Look at Wildfires Burning Around the Western U.S.

By The Associated Press

Here is a look at wildfires burning around the West.

Washington

A wildfire that has burned nearly 10 square miles and destroyed one home in southeast Washington is about 50 percent contained. It started July 20 and was human-caused.

California

- Campgrounds were evacuated and hundreds of homes were threatened by a 2-square-mile wildfire in Sierra National Forest north of Fresno. It was 5 percent contained.

- Four firefighters were injured Sunday and a fire engine was damaged in a wildfire threatening about 1,800 homes in the Sierra Nevada foothills northeast of Sacramento. The fire was 20 percent contained.

- Authorities arrested a man suspected of starting a grassland fire that forced people from their homes and destroyed power lines. The blaze charred 430 acres near Elverta, north of Sacramento. It was about 25 percent contained.

Glacier National Park

- Fire crews were taking advantage of cooler, wet weather in fighting a fire in Glacier National Park in Montana that has burned about 5 square miles on the north shore of St. Mary Lake since it started July 21. The fire was 30 percent contained.

Body Found Inside Suitcase at SeaTac Apartment Complex

SEATAC, Wash. (AP) — A body has been found inside a suitcase at a SeaTac apartment complex.

Because the body is in bad condition, the medical examiner will need to determine the gender, identification and cause of death, King County sheriff's spokesman Sgt. Stan Seo said.

Detectives were called to the Abbey Ridge Apartments at 8:30 a.m. Monday after a maintenance worker discovered the body just before the garbage trucks arrived to empty the dumpsters, Seo said.

This is the second time since May that the sheriff's office has investigated a body found in

My kids love their dentist

"Wow, if you are in need of a dentist, Dr. Calvin Kim is awesome!"
"We have been to two other dentists in the past year, both of them pediatric dentists, in an effort to have dental work done on our daughter. She petrified to the point that both dentists insisted that she be put under general anesthesia. Dr. Kim asked me if I could give it a try. I agreed and so thankful. He took the time to put Mary at ease and got through the whole treatment. Mary actually asked when she could back! How is that for a compliment?"
- Kristen Zanas
"Without a doubt the best dentist I've ever been to. My 7 year old had to have two teeth pulled and he still doesn't know he had 4 shots to numb his mouth! Dr. Kim passed that challenge with flying colors." - Sandi Stuit

Centralia's Summer Run Ends With State Loss to Spokane

By The Chronicle

BELLINGHAM — Sobe-Toyota rallied late, but couldn't complete its comeback in a 7-6 loss to the Spokane Northstars here Saturday in loser-out American Legion AAA State Tournament action at Joe Martin Stadium.

The Northstars plated four runs in the bottom of the eighth inning to take a 7-3 lead, though Centralia went to work in the top of the ninth. Brody Holcomb doubled, followed up by a Max Dulin single to start things off, and set up a sacrifice fly by Zeb Chamberlain. After a fielder's choice and a walk to Elijah Johnson, Christian Peters hit a single to load the bases. John Sharkey and Nolan Wasson each added RBI singles in the ninth, but a strikeout with the bases loaded ended the game.

Dulin went 3 for 4 and scored a pair of runs, while Wasson, Holcomb and Brandon Davis each had two hits.

Sharkey pitched all eight innings for Centralia, allowing 13 hits while striking out six and walking five.

Centralia equalled Spokane with 13 hits and struck out just once as a team, and finished the summer with a 24-18 record.

By The Chronicle

LEWISTON — Glacier took a 9-0 run after three innings and the Twin Cities All-Stars were unable to come back in a 9-7 loss on Monday in the 14-year-old Pacific Northwest Babe Ruth Regional Tournament.

Jerod Frias and Gabe O'Neil each went 1 for 2 with an RBI, and Lane Douglass was 2 for 3 with an RBI for Twin Cities.

O'Neil also pitched the final 3 1/3 innings of the game, striking out four and giving up just a single earned run.

Twin Cities scored six runs in the top of the fourth, with hits from Brock Jones and Daniel Fagerness starting things off. O'Neil, Frias and Lane Douglass added RBI singles, and a passed ball brought in another run.

Glacier managed 12 hits in the win, despite committing five errors.

Twin Cities, which lost 11-5 to West Linn, Ore., on Saturday and beat Kelso, 8-5, on Sunday. The All-Stars are now 1-2 in regional pool play, and take on host Lewiston at 6 p.m. tonight.

Note: The Twin Cities 13-year-old All-Stars finished tied for third in their Pacific Northwest Regional Tournament, going 3-1 in pool play but losing 10-5 to eventual champion Camas on Saturday in the regional semifinals.

SEATTLE — Paul Goldschmidt hit his 22nd homer of the season in the first inning and scored the go-ahead run in the 10th on Jake Lamb's sacrifice fly as the Arizona Diamondbacks beat the Seattle Mariners 4-3 on Monday night.

The Diamondbacks won their third straight despite blowing a 3-2 lead in the ninth inning. They took advantage of control issues by Seattle closer Carson Smith (1-4) in the 10th to regain the lead.

STILL GOING: Sobe-Toyota to Face Bellingham in Elimination Game Today in Olympia

By The Chronicle

OLYMPIA — Chehalis used a big fourth inning to power past the Yakima Valley Peppers and keep its summer season alive here on Monday in a 6-2 win in the American Legion AA State Tournament.

The win puts Chehalis (29-4) in another loser-out game today, against Bellingham.

Nole Wollan had two hits in Monday's win, including a two-run single in Chehalis' four-run fourth inning. Catcher Kolby Steen added two hits.

"We're at the point where it's elimination time for us, so coming through the loser's bracket, it's the end of the summer, and I thought the kids responded really well," Chehalis coach Bryan Bullock said. "I thought it was a good effort. The kids played like they wanted to continue playing this summer."

Brandon White started on the mound and pitched five innings, striking out four and holding the Peppers to three hits — one of which was a solo home run, the only run he allowed. Austin Emery pitched the final two innings.

Chehalis and Bellingham will face off today at Olympia High School at 3 p.m.

A-Rod Homers on 40th Birthday; Yanks Top Texas

ARLINGTON, Texas (TNS) — In these bubbly summer days for Alex Rodriguez, 40 sure looks like the new 30. And the Yankees have the confident look of a club that's capable of a memorable autumn run.

"I have a good feeling about this team. I think one through 25, everyone makes contributions, guys are picking each other up and it feels really good," Rodriguez said Monday, before celebrating his 40th birthday with another home run in the Yankees' third straight victory.

Shortstop Didi Gregorius was the unlikely hitting star, belting a two-run homer, collecting three hits and a career-high four RBIs in a 6-2 win against the Rangers at Globe Life Park. Rodriguez joined Ty Cobb, Rusty Staub and Gary Sheffield as the only players to have hit a home run before the age of 20 and after turning 40.

A-Rod 'In a Good Place' While Celebrating 40th Birthday in Texas

LONG RIDE: Aging Slugger Exceeding Expectations With Yankees

By Erik Boland
Newsday

ARLINGTON, Texas — Alex Rodriguez pondered the question for several seconds, even complimenting it before attempting an answer.

"That's such a great question," Rodriguez said.

The question: what would the 40-year-old Alex tell the 20 or 30-year-old Alex?

"I am in no position to give anyone advice, including myself," said A-Rod, who turned 40 on Monday. "There was a point and a time for me that hitting home runs and being a great baseball player was all that mattered. And I figured that by hitting home runs it would justify whatever behavior I had off the field, and I realize today that it is not that way at all."

He continued: "Hitting home runs does not make a good father, doesn't make you a good friend, and it certainly doesn't make you a good teammate, and to me they are (all) important."

On the occasion of his 40th birthday, which he planned to celebrate after Monday's game with his two daughters, who are in town, and his teammates, A-Rod said, "I am in a good place."

On and off the field that would appear to be the case.

Rodriguez, for whom few outside the club — and more than a few inside it — had expected much entering the season, came into Monday with a .277/.375/.539 slash line with 23 homers and 58 RBI. He ranks second on the team in homers, one behind Mark Teixeira, and is tied for second in RBI (with Brian McCann) behind Teixeira's 65.

"For him to have so much time off and everybody wondering what he was going to do, for him to show everybody the star he is, is very impressive," said Dellin Betances who, like many of the Yankees' younger players, see Rodriguez as a mentor. "He's been one of the biggest reasons we're in first right now."

Because of his past with PEDs, including a season-long suspension last year, A-Rod's numbers to this point have brought continued speculation.

Speaking to reporters who cover the Yankees March 26 in Port Charlotte, Fla. before a spring training game against the Rays, Commissioner Rob Manfred said Rodriguez would be treated the same as anyone else found in violation of the Joint Drug Agreement.

"He's tested exactly like every other player who has violated the program," Manfred said. "The program requires more frequent testing for players who are coming back after a suspension."

According to Section III of the JDA, Rodriguez, or any player found in violation, is subject to "six unannounced urine collections and three unannounced blood collections over the twelve months following the violation that resulted in the follow-up testing, and six unannounced urine collections and three unannounced blood collections in every subsequent year in the Player's career during which he is on a Club's 40-man roster."

Coincidentally, MLB testers were in the Yankees' clubhouse before Monday's game, though it wasn't clear who was being tested and the sight of them throughout the season in the clubhouse is constant.

For his part, A-Rod hasn't directly answered questions about PEDs since he showed up in late February for spring training and, consequently, those questions have mostly stopped being asked.

But in answering a question about his expectations for himself the rest of the season — compared to the entire spring and early part of the season when he consistently said "I don't know what to expect" — A-Rod did make a reference to his PED past.

"I thought April would be my most challenging month and as I started getting more repetition hopefully I would get better, and I think that's happened," he said. "I hope that continues. I am going to continue to work hard and go through my regimen, but it's also a nice reminder to me that if you play clean and you work hard, that good things can happen."

Rangers, Dodgers Still Have Most to Offer for Cole Hamels

TORONTO (TNS) — Throughout the months of speculation regarding where Cole Hamels will pitch the final three-plus guaranteed years of his contract, the Los Angeles Dodgers have often been mentioned as an apt trading partner for the Phillies.

That remains the case in the final days leading to the highly anticipated trade deadline. But with the days passing until 4 p.m. Friday, the Texas Rangers — reportedly along with the Dodgers the front-runners to land Hamels — might be the ideal team for the Phillies to trade their 31-year-old ace.

Despite entering the week 47-50, 7.5 games behind the American League West-leading Los Angeles Angels and 4.5 games back of the Minnesota Twins in the crowded wild-card race, the Rangers could acquire Hamels with an eye toward next season.

Even if they miss the postseason this fall, trading for the Phillies' ace would allow them to come back in 2016 with a rotation headlined by Hamels, Yu Darvish and Derek Holland.

Regarding possible returns for the Phillies, the Rangers might have the most to offer in terms of prospects. The Dodgers' farm system is flush with young talent but if they will not part with shortstop Corey Seager, arguably baseball's best prospect, or 18-year-old Mexican left-hander Julio Urias, it could prove more difficult for the two clubs to reach a deal.

On the other hand, if the Rangers make power-hitting third baseman Joey Gallo unavailable in a trade, they still boast several other promising prospects who have already reached Double A or higher.

Nomar Mazara, 20, and Nick Williams, 21, are each left-handed hitting outfielders with pop playing for the Rangers' Double-A Frisco affiliate in the Texas League.

The 22-year-old Jorge Alfaro, said to need work behind the plate but touted for his bat and rocket arm, is among baseball's top catching prospects. (Alfaro suffered a potentially season-ending ankle injury in June, though, which could complicate his inclusion in a potential trade.)

Right-handers Jake Thompson, 21, and Alex "Chi Chi" Gonzalez, 23, are Texas' top two minor-league arms. The Rangers acquired Thompson in last July's trade of closer Joakim Soria to the Detroit Tigers. Gonzalez, the Rangers' first-round draft pick in 2013, already has made seven major-league starts. The Phillies would certainly like young players closer to the majors than not to help as soon as possible. Gonzalez could do that.

Angels Acquire Outfielder Shane Victorino from Red Sox

LOS ANGELES (TNS) — In what they hope was their first move and not their only move before this week's trade deadline, the Angels on Monday acquired outfielder Shane Victorino from the Boston Red Sox.

The Angels remain in the market for a starting left fielder, or at least one they can platoon with Victorino. They see him as outfield depth acquired at minimal cost, leaving prospects available for other trades — not only for a left fielder, but for a relief pitcher as well.

To get Victorino, the Angels gave up Triple-A infielder Josh Rutledge. The Red Sox agreed to pay all but about $1 million of Victorino's remaining salary.

The Angels' left fielders this season are batting .212, with five home runs and a .589 OPS, ranking last or tied for last in the majors in all three categories.

Victorino, 34, is batting .245 in 33 games this season, with one home run and a .622 OPS. He has been on the disabled list twice this year and six times in the last three years — three times because of a strained right hamstring.

"He's had some injuries. We know that," Angels general manager Bill Stoneman said. "He's fine now. We're only looking at a couple months left in the season."

That enables the Angels to broaden their search for outfield help. They still would like a full-time left fielder, but could get a platoon partner for Victorino.

"It could open up that possibility," Stoneman said. "We'll see. You still have to make that other deal, if that's the way it ends up. And that's not necessarily how it's going to end up."

The Dodgers acquired Victorino at the July trade deadline three years ago. He batted .245 with two home runs in 53 games. The Red Sox signed him as a free agent that offseason.

USGA Tabs Pinehurst to Host 2024 US Open

By Chip Alexander

The News & Observer (Raleigh, N.C.)

The U.S. Open keeps coming back to Pinehurst.

The U.S. Golf Association officially announced Wednesday that the 2024 U.S. Open would be played on the No. 2 course at Pinehurst Resort and Country Club, marking the fourth time in 25 years that Pinehurst will host the major championship.

The announcement was made barely a year after Pinehurst hosted both the 2014 U.S. Open and the U.S. Women's Open in back-to-back weeks, an unprecedented golf coupling. While the USGA does not have an official rotation of U.S. Open courses, Pinehurst No. 2 now has been the choice for the 1999, 2005, 2014 and 2024 Opens.

"It's a day to celebrate," Pinehurst resort president Tom Pashley said Wednesday. "It's a great honor to earn the respect and trust of the U.S. Golf Association. Their willingness to return in 2024 again validates No. 2 as a championship test."

"It's very important to continue to host a U.S. Open. It's something that continues to make Pinehurst relevant to each generation."

Pashley said there had been no discussions with the USGA about hosting the 2024 U.S. Women's Open in another Open doubleheader, but said Pinehurst would agree to do it, if asked.

In the 1999 Open, the late Payne Stewart won with a dramatic par putt on the final hole, edging Phil Mickelson and striking a victory pose that became iconic.

Pinehurst quickly was awarded the 2005 U.S. Open, won by Michael Campbell of New Zealand in a last-day duel with Tiger Woods. Martin Kaymer of Germany was a runaway winner in the U.S. Open last year, and Michelle Wie then followed with her breakthrough victory in a major championship by winning the U.S. Women's Open.

"The thrill of hosting an Open never goes away," Pashley said. "There are distinct memories from each Open. I remember last year feeling so proud of having so many people at Pinehurst, so many people talking about Pinehurst. We're in it and around it every day, but when the world sees it, it's invigorating."

"Each Open carves out its own identity, its own memories. It should be that way in 2024."

Pinehurst officials were expecting the USGA to break the news on the 2024 Open this week, after the playing of the British Open at St. Andrews. But the Pinehurst Village Council voted last week to approve a licensing agreement with the USGA for the 2024 championship. The agreement will include a payment of $350,000 by the USGA to the council.

"We are absolutely pleased to partner again with the USGA," Pinehurst mayor Nancy Fiorillo said last week.

The USGA on Wednesday announced the sites for three U.S. Opens: The Country Club in Brookline, Mass. (2022), Los Angeles Country Club (2023) and Pinehurst. The 2024 Open will be played June 13-16.

"Pinehurst has elevated itself to one of the great and historic places in golf in this country," USGA president Thomas O'Toole said. "Some say it's our St. Andrews — it's certainly something special, and that's why we're going back there for the 2024 U.S. Open."

Having the 2014 Opens in back-to-back weeks was an economic boon. There was $140 million in visitor spending, with an economic impact of more than $238 million.

Pashley didn't completely rule out a U.S. Open-U.S. Women's Open repeat in 2024. He noted USGA made its announcement on the 2014 U.S. Women's Open site two years after its 2014 U.S. Open selection.

Pinehurst will host a pair of USGA events before the 2024 Open: the 2017 U.S. Amateur Four-Ball Championship the 2019 U.S. Amateur. The U.S. Open will be the 11th USGA event held at Pinehurst resort.

Pinehurst No. 2, the Donald Ross masterpiece, underwent an extensive restoration before the 2014 Opens. The golf design team of Ben Crenshaw and Bill Coore made such changes as narrowing fairways and adding more natural areas and native grasses, giving No. 2 a more rustic look.

The bent-grass greens on No. 2 then were replaced by Champion bermuda grass soon after the championships. Pashley said he did not anticipate any other significant changes being made, although length is always a concern because of enhanced golf technology.

Pressed to pick an early-line favorite for the 2024 U.S. Open, Pashley said Jordan Spieth, this year's U.S. Open champ, will be just 30.

"In theory he should be in his prime, and there's no telling how many Opens he may have won by then," Pashley said.

Andrew Chafin pitched the 10th for his second save, striking out Seth Smith for the final out with the tying run at second base.

Arizona was one out from winning in the ninth, but Mike Zunino lined an RBI single on a 0-2 pitch off reliever Oliver Perez (2-1) to score pinch-runner Chris Taylor with the tying run.

Arizona tried to get through the ninth with Daniel Hudson and Perez after closer Brad Ziegler — having converted 15 straight save attempts — was given the night off after pitching the previous three days.

Seattle Believes Struggling Rodney Tipping Pitches

By Tim Booth

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — The Seattle Mariners manager believe struggling reliever Fernando Rodney is tipping his pitches, part of what's caused a significant decline after leading baseball in saves a season ago.

Seattle manager Lloyd McClendon said before Monday's series opener with Arizona that his staff has been watching tape and there are some "dramatic" things that stand out and may have helped batters know what pitch is coming from the right-hander.

"Fernando was tipping some pitches. We've got to get that straightened out," McClendon said. "We've got to get him to the point where he's not tipping anymore and I think you'll see him getting back to being productive again. When hitters know what is coming it's a lot easier."

Rodney was pulled from the closer role in early June, but his struggles have continued. He has given up at least one earned run in six of his last eight appearances. He allowed Mark Teixeira's winning homer in the eighth inning on July 19 against the Yankees, then gave up a tying, two-run homer in the eighth inning of last Saturday's 8-6 loss to Toronto.

McClendon said the problem of pitches being tipped is more of a recent development. Rodney uses only two pitches — fastball and changeup — and much of his past success is based around the ability to locate his fastball around the strike zone.

He was 0-1 with a 2.88 ERA in 23 games with Triple-A Reno and 1-1 with a 4.11 ERA in 12 games with Arizona this season. He will report to Triple-A Tacoma.

Asked if he thought he was tipping pitches, Rodney only offered "Maybe?"

"The only thing I can do is go outside and practice and make sure everything is the same," Rodney said.

Rodney has appeared in 42 games and has a 5.90 ERA, his highest ERA since 2003. Rodney led baseball with 48 saves last season but the inconsistency of this season led to his replacement as Seattle's closer. Rookie Carson Smith has been Seattle's primary closer since early June, but Rodney has continued to be used in the seventh and eighth innings.

Since July 7, Rodney has allowed seven earned runs and four homers in 6 2/3 innings.

"We're going to figure it out," Rodney said.

Sounders Fall Victim to Another Late Goal

By Don Ruiz

The News Tribune

For the third consecutive game, the Seattle Sounders evened into the final 10 minutes head at 0-0; and for the third consecutive game, they lost.

The latest disappointment came in the 88th minute Saturday when Montreal defender Laurent Ciman headed in a free kick that gave the Impact a 1-0 home win at Stade Saputo.

"It's a punch in the gut certainly," Seattle goalkeeper Troy Perkins said. "But it's also a wake-up call that, look, these are the games that we have to see out. ... You say, 'You know what: It's going to be zero-zero.'"

The loss was Seattle's sixth in its past seven games, and it eerily echoed the previous two: 1-0 at Chicago on July 11, with the goal coming in second-half stoppage time, and 1-0 to Colorado on July 18, with the winner coming in the 84th minute.

The Sounders have scored only two goals over those past seven games, and haven't scored in 272 minutes. Over the 90 minutes Saturday, they were outshot 14-3. Montreal (7-8-3) put six shots on goal, the Sounders (10-10-2) none.

"You can't go 270 minutes without scoring a goal," Seattle coach Sigi Schmid said. "That's just not good enough. We're not even forcing saves from goalkeepers. ... We should at least get out of here with a tie. We have three games now in the last three weeks where we should have gotten at least three ties."

There were chances. In the sixth minute, Seattle's Chad Barrett put a header wide from 8 yards. In the second half, Lamar Neagle sent a header wide from 6 yards away, and another time received a ball in a dangerous position, but couldn't fire a shot before Ciman swept it away.

"The players have to play better," Schmid said. "We had some people facing some people up, but when you're facing people up you've got to make plays. Lamar has a marvelous opportunity where he's got a bouncing ball and he's breaking in, and that's got to be a shot on goal. But he has a bad first touch, and now he has to try to beat the defense — and he's a good defender, so he doesn't beat the defender. But if you have a good first touch, maybe you score a goal."

The shot that went in was set up by a foul called on Seattle midfielder Osvaldo Alonso. That set up a free kick that Marco Donadel launched in front of the far post, where Ciman slipped it past Perkins.

"Our job is to keep it to keep it to zero and keep them out, and we did a good job overall except for that one slip," Perkins said. "... It would have been great to get a point or three points just for a little bit of a mood swing."

The Sounders fell to three points from the red line separating the six playoff teams from the rest of the pack.

They were again playing without five usual starters: forwards Clint Dempsey and Obafemi Martins, midfielders Brad Evans and Marco Pappa and goalkeeper Stefan Frei.

"Some guys probably need to go to the bench," Schmid said. "But we don't have any alternatives right now, so there's not much we can do."

There should be more options this coming Saturday against Vancouver, when Dempsey and Evans are expected back, and Martins (leg) and Frei (shoulder) could be available.

"Every team goes through struggles during the season, and every team either digs themselves out or finds themselves missing out of the playoffs," veteran defender Zach Scott said. "So, yes, we're hopeful with the guys who are coming in that they're going to help dig us out of this. But we also have to be realistic that it's more than two, three or four guys missing. It has to be team-wide playing better."

Seattle Reign Shuts Out 'Big Sister' Portland, 3-0

By Matt Pentz

The Seattle Times

The Portland Thorns are still pointed to as the model franchise in the National Women's Soccer League, even while languishing in the bottom part of the standings.

They have the highest capacity and highest average attendance in the league, boast some of the sport's biggest names. Earlier this year, the Guardian ran a feature under the sensational headline, "Are the Portland Thorns the first 'real club' in women's football?"

Laura Harvey, the Seattle Reign's famously meticulous coach and general manager, internalized every slight.

"We were the poor little sister," Harvey said, which has made their recent gains in this sibling rivalry all the sweeter.

Less than half a week after the Reign sent a league-record crowd at Providence Park home with bowed heads courtesy of a 1-0 win, Seattle dominated its southern rivals 3-0 on Sunday afternoon at Memorial Stadium to leap into first place in the league.

Jess Fishlock opened the scoring late in the first half and Beverly Yanez netted a pair of second-half goals, while a club-record crowd of 6,303 braved some grumpy Northwest weather.

Seattle as a market has been an albatross for the NWSL since its fitful first season. Commissioner Jeff Plush called it the "best soccer market in the United States" in a preseason interview, yet the Reign still struggled to fill even half of Memorial Stadium.

"I go back to the first year, and media around the league and around women's soccer ruled us out," Harvey said. "They said there should be two Portland teams and why should there be a Seattle team. That spurred us on."

Portland defeated Seattle all four times they faced off during the inaugural NWSL season. The Thorns won the first title, too. Yet with Sunday's win, the Reign has pulled within 4-5-0 in the all-time series.

Even with their current struggles — Sunday's loss sank Portland into eighth out of nine teams — the Thorns remain exceeding marketable. All three of the female players chosen to appear on the upcoming regional covers for the video game FIFA 16 — U.S. forward Alex Morgan, Canada's Christine Sinclair and Australia's Steph Catley — play for Portland.

In many ways, though, the Portland team is an anomaly, not a model the rest of the league's clubs can easily follow. The Thorns and Houston's Dash are the only two clubs in the league tied directly to their city's MLS club.

"They have the help from the Timbers and the existing infrastructure," said Reign midfielder Amber Brooks, who played for Portland last season. "... (The Reign) had to build from the ground up."

As such, there have been some missteps. Seattle's seventh-place finish in that inaugural season didn't help matters, and neither did playing all its home matches at Starfire Sports Complex in Tukwila for the first year before moving to Memorial.

"I think the move to Memorial was a big one," co-owner Bill Predmore said Sunday when asked what he'd learned in two-plus seasons. "Folks from Seattle, they'd prefer to see a game downtown. I think they've been gracious about accepting some of the shortcomings of Memorial with the benefits that it brings."

Predmore said the team is considering some offseason upgrades to Memorial — better food, new seats.

The team has improved drastically on the field, too. Seattle won the regular-season championship last season before falling to FC Kansas City in the final. After an uneven start, the Reign now find themselves in a familiar perch, looking down on the table ahead of the stretch run.

They've done so in style.

Each of Sunday's goals were emblematic of Seattle's free-wheeling, attacking style. Kim Little picked out Fishlock with a screwball of a through ball to set up the opener, then found Yanez for the second. Megan Rapinoe, playing in her first home match since early May, provided the assist on the third, capping a five-minute stretch that saw the lead balloon from one to three.

Players talk glowingly about the freedom that Harvey's system allows, and their exuberance shows itself in flicks and one-time passes.

"I think the clubs have a responsibility to make sure that all of their players want to buy in," Harvey said. "I think we're a good example of that. We don't have all the luxury in the world, but we've provided them with something that they bind to."

"The last two games have been a testament to who we are, to who we want to be and the fact that we don't feel like we're the finished product yet. We want to keep building."

Cardinals Hire Woman as Training Camp Coach

By Bob Glauber

Newsday

Cardinals coach Bruce Arians suggested at the NFL owners meetings in March that he could foresee a time when the league would hire female coaches.

"The minute they can prove they can make a player better, they'll be hired," Arians said.

Arians wound up being the first to make the move, hiring former women's pro football player Jen Welter as an intern for training camp and the preseason. Welter, 37, a former college rugby player who played nearly 14 years in the Women's Football Alliance, will coach the Cardinals' inside linebackers. She is believed to be the first woman to hold a coaching position in the NFL.

"Coaching is nothing more than teaching," Arians said Monday, when the hiring was announced. "One thing I have learned from players is, 'How are you going to make me better? If you can make me better, I don't care if you're the Green Hornet, man, I'll listen.'"

"I really believe she'll have a great opportunity with this internship through training camp to open some doors for her."

Earlier this year, the NFL hired its first full-time female official. Sarah Thomas, a former high school and college football official, will serve as a line judge in 2015. Last year, the Spurs made former WNBA star Becky Hammon the NBA's first full-time female assistant coach. She led the Spurs to this year's Las Vegas Summer League championship.

Not long after Arians made his comments, Welter was recommended to him by the coach of the Texas Revolution of the Indoor Football League. She is an assistant on the Revolution staff.

"She came for an (official team activity) and I met her, and I thought she was the type of person that could handle this in a very positive way for women and open that door," said Arians, the NFL's Coach of the Year in 2012 and 2014.

Welter, who has a master's degree in sports psychology and a Ph.D in psychology, was the first female to play a non-kicking position in a men's pro football league when she played running back and special teams for the Revolution in 2014. She also played for Team USA in the International Federation of American Football Women's World Championship, winning gold medals in 2010 and 2013.

Arians said he spoke with several of his veteran players about hiring a female coach and that "they were all very cool with it. It's not going to be a distraction in any way."

The coach said he hopes Welter's hiring will lead to further opportunities for her and other female coaches. "I believe very strongly in it," he said.

Carolina Panthers OT Jonathan Martin, 25, Retires From Football

By Tribune News Services

Backup Panthers offensive lineman Jonathan Martin, best known for his role in the Miami Dolphins bullying scandal two years ago, has decided to retire, a team source confirmed to the Observer.

Martin, who was claimed by Carolina off waivers in March, has a back injury that could require surgery, according to NFL Network. At 25 years old, Martin decided to retire rather than get the surgery and continue playing.

According to FOX Sports, Martin suffered the injury during a recent workout and would require sitting out for at least six weeks.

Martin went through OTAs and veteran minicamp last month as the primary backup to left tackle Michael Oher. Rookie Daryl Williams was serving as the primary backup at right tackle to Mike Remmers. David Foucault, Martin Wallace and Nate Chandler are the other tackles on Carolina's roster.

Martin started in 32 of his 38 NFL games for the Dolphins and 49ers. While with the Dolphins in 2013, Martin left the team for "emotional reasons," and a later report found that he had been the subject of bullying in the locker room.

"All that's in the past. My focus has always been just moving forward to what's next," Martin said during a conference call with Charlotte reporters after signing with the Panthers. "Now after I've spent a year in San Francisco I'm with the Panthers, and just looking forward to my opportunity and making the most of it."

After an unsuccessful one-year stint in San Francisco, the Panthers claimed Martin off waivers as the team tried to overhaul its offensive tackle depth.

Martin was still on his original rookie deal from 2012. Because of retirement he will forfeit the $1.042 million he was set to receive from Carolina this season.

Umenyiora to Sign One-Day Contract so He Can Retire as a Giant

Osi Umenyiora is expected to sign a contract with the Giants — just not the kind of contract that puts him back on the field to help the team's pass-rush issues.

The former Giants sack specialist, who helped the team win Super Bowl championships after the 2007 and 2011 seasons, will sign a one-day contract to retire as a Giant, according to a source familiar with the situation. The move is expected to happen sometime during training camp, which begins on Friday.

The contract would not preclude Umenyiora from returning to the NFL if he wanted to resume playing for another club.

Umenyiora, 33, joined the Giants as a second-round draft pick out of Troy State in 2003, and played 10 seasons before signing with the Falcons in 2013 as a free agent. He had 75 sacks for the Giants and added 10 more for the Falcons.

Umenyiora was a first-team All-Pro in 2005, when he had a career-high 14.5 sacks. He was a second-team All-Pro in 2010. He had 13 sacks in the Giants' 2007 championship season and added nine in 2011, when the Giants beat the Patriots in the Super Bowl for the second time.

Cavaliers Trade Miller, Haywood, Draft Picks to Blazers

By Jason Lloyd

Akron Beacon Journal

The Cavaliers' long-awaited trade of Brendan Haywood is finally complete. The added twist is the deal took Mike Miller with him.

Both Haywood and Miller were traded to the Portland Trail Blazers on Sunday, along with two second-round picks in exchange for cash, a league source told the Beacon Journal. The move creates two trade exceptions for the Cavaliers — a roughly $10.6 million exception for Haywood and a nearly $3 million exception for Miller. They cannot be combined, but they will give the Cavs both roster and financial flexibility at February's trade deadline (or sooner). The Cavs will have one year to use the exceptions.

The Cavs will send the Blazers the more favorable of their two 2019 second-round picks, which previously belonged to the Los Angeles Lakers and Minnesota Timberwolves. The Cavs will also send their own second-round pick in 2020.

The move of Haywood had long been expected, and in recent weeks it became apparent the Cavs would deal him to either the Blazers or the Philadelphia 76ers (the only two teams with enough cap space to take him) to create the trade exception. The addition of Miller to the deal was a mild surprise, but the source with knowledge of the negotiations, speaking on the condition of anonymity given the sensitive nature of trade talks, said LeBron James was fine with the move and that Miller had asked for it.

Miller exercised his $2.85 million player option earlier this month, then approached the Cavs asking for a way out. Miller wasn't going to find that much money on the open market, so electing to pick up the option was wise. But he wanted a chance to play after never really fitting into coach David Blatt's rotation last season.

Miller, 35, appeared in just 52 games last season after playing in all 82 games the year before with the Memphis Grizzlies. He shot 33 percent from 3-point range and made just 32 3-pointers, his lowest total in 12 years.

ESPN reported the Blazers are likely to release Miller or buy out his contract, clearing the way for him to sign with a team of his choice. ESPN also reported the early contenders are a return to the Grizzlies, the Oklahoma City Thunder and the Dallas Mavericks. Under league rules, Miller cannot return to the Cavs for one year.

The trade gives the Cavs the league's largest trade exception this season, while also slashing their tax bill. The final figures won't be known until decisions are made on Tristan Thompson, J.R. Smith and Matthew Dellavedova, but ESPN reported the Cavs at least temporarily slashed their luxury tax bill from $32 million to less than $5 million with the deal. That figure is expected to rise again, however, once the remaining free agents are signed.

Regardless, moving Miller could save the Cavs as much as about $10 million in luxury taxes.

Sunday's deal, coupled with the recent trade of rookie rakeem Christmas to the Indiana Pacers, leaves the Cavs with agreements or signed contracts with 10 players. That number doesn't include Smith, Thompson or Dellavedova. The Cavs also have the draft rights to Sir'Dominic Pointer, considered a longshot to make the team, and Russian Sasha Kaun, who could debut in the NBA this season.

Yahoo sports was the first to report the trade.

Johnson, Martinez, Smoltz, Biggio Enter Hall of Fame

By John Kekis

The Associated Press

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. — Three pitchers who became dominant after trades and a rock-solid catcher-turned-second baseman have a new moniker — Hall of Famer.

Randy Johnson, Pedro Martinez, John Smoltz and Craig Biggio were inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame on Sunday and basked in the spotlight one more time with at least 40,000 fans cheering from the sun-drenched field beyond.

For Martinez, the last to speak, the moment was magical as scores in the crowd waved Dominican flags for one of their own. Martinez, who also delivered part of his speech in Spanish, and former Giants great Juan Marichal, elected in 1983, are the only Hall of Famers from the Caribbean nation.

At the end of the ceremony, Martinez beckoned Marichal to the stage and they held their flag high, one last emotional gesture as the crowd roared.

"We waited 32 years for another Dominican," said Martinez, who wore a patch honoring his nation's flag on one shoulder and another honoring the United States on the other. "I hope all Dominicans remember this. I don't think the Dominican Republic will have a better image than me and Marichal on Father's Day (in the Dominican Republic) to be up there."

Playing through an era tainted by steroids and ruled by offense — compliments of bulked-up sluggers, a smaller strike zone and smaller ballparks — Johnson, Martinez and Smoltz proved indomitable. They combined for 735 wins, 11,113 strikeouts and nine Cy Young Awards.

Biggio, who played four positions in his 20-year career, all with the Houston Astros, was indefatigable, becoming an All-

Star at second base and behind the plate.

"We changed the culture in Houston by making it a baseball city," said Biggio, who grew up on New York's Long Island. "To the Astros fans, you guys are the greatest fans in the world."

Martinez, 219-100 for his career, helped Boston break an 86-year-old World Series drought in 2004 and is the first pitcher inducted who played primarily for the Red Sox. He grew up with five brothers and sisters in a one-room home on the outskirts of Santo Domingo and credits brother Ramon, a starter with the Dodgers during Pedro's rookie season in Los Angeles, as a key to his career.

"I have a second dad," said Martinez, who won 117 games and two Cy Youngs in seven seasons pitching in hitter-friendly Fenway Park. "Ramon, you are my second dad. I followed in his footsteps and it led me to where I am today."

Remarkably, all three pitchers didn't stick around with their first clubs very long. Drafted by Montreal, Johnson made the Expos' roster in 1988 and midway through the 1989 season was traded to the Seattle Mariners.

Smoltz, signed by his hometown Detroit Tigers after being selected on the 22nd round of the 1985 amateur draft, was dealt to Atlanta for veteran Doyle Alexander in August 1987. And the Dodgers, thinking he might be too fragile at 5-foot-10 and 170 pounds for the rigors of the game as a starter, traded Martinez to Montreal after the hard-throwing right-hander with the pinpoint control had a solid rookie season in the bullpen.

On this day, that was ancient history.

Johnson, at 6-foot-10 the tallest player elected to the Hall of Fame, gave special thanks to his parents. His father died in 1992. His mother, Carol, was watching from the front row.

"Thank you, mom. You're the Hall of Famer," Johnson said.

Johnson became a 20-game winner in 1997 and won four

AP Sources: NFL Close to New Football Inspection Rules

By Barry Wilner

The Associated Press

The NFL is preparing to send out instructions to game officials and teams explaining new rules for inspecting footballs.

Two people familiar with the league's plans tell The Associated Press on Monday that proper inflation of the footballs will be documented as part of the new policy. But those people, speaking on condition of anonymity because the league has not released information on the new policy, say no instructions have been sent out yet.

The first preseason game is Aug. 9, the Hall of Fame game between Minnesota and Pittsburgh in Canton, Ohio.

Among the details being considered for the new policy: having game officials appointed by the referee inspect the 48 footballs for each game more than two hours before kickoff. In the past, the referee inspected the footballs.

Also under consideration is checking pressure readings for every ball before the game and then again at halftime.

These changes stem from the use of underinflated footballs in the AFC championship game, which led to a four-game suspension for New England quarterback Tom Brady, a $1 million fine for the Patriots, and two draft picks.

Brady has appealed the suspension and is awaiting Commissioner Roger Goodell's ruling. The Patriots did not challenge their punishments.

Under the new guidelines, the official in charge of K balls used in the kicking game would handle all footballs after they pass inspection by the two chosen game officials. Ten minutes before the game, a member of the officiating crew and a security official will bring 24 balls, 12 for each team, to the field. The other 24 balls will remain in the officials' dressing room.

Those footballs would be used in the second half of games in which the first 24 balls are inspected at halftime. Those halftime inspections will be done randomly.

Data for all inspected balls, including the amount of air in each, will be sent to the league office for evaluation.

AROUND THE HORN

Craig Biggio, Randy Johnson, Pedro Martinez and John Smoltz were inducted into the National Baseball Hall of Fame Sunday in the largest class elected by the Baseball Writers' Association of America since 1955. Biggio, who played 20 seasons with the Astros, became the first player to reach 3,000 hits, 600 doubles, 400 stolen bases, and 250 home runs and holds the major league record of being hit by 285 pitches (in the modern era). Johnson, who pitched for six teams over 22 seasons, was enshrined in a Diamondbacks hat, the lone team he won a World Series with in 2001. Martinez led the majors in ERA five times and the league in strikeouts three times, winning three Cy Young Awards and one World Series with Boston. Smoltz is the first pitcher to ever amass 200 wins and 150 saves, as he switched to the bullpen in 2001 after undergoing Tommy John surgery. ...

Zack Greinke's scoreless innings streak ended at 45.2 innings Sunday when opposing pitcher Jacob deGrom scored Kirk Nieuwenhuis on a fielder's choice. ...

The Toronto Blue Jays ran into a 3-6-2 triple play Sunday thanks to some poor baserunning, the first time a triple play has been turned in that fashion since 1955. ...

David Ortiz had seven RBIs Sunday (most of which came on a pair of three-run home runs), and his 1,587 career RBIs passed Hall of Famers Al Kaline, Harmon Killebrew and Rogers Hornsby for 38th on the all-time list. ...

In what may have been his final start in a Phillies uniform before a potential trade, Cole Hamels no-hit the Cubs Saturday at Wrigley Field. It was the first no-hitter at that stadium since 1972 and the 13th in Philadelphia history. ...

Two days after being acquired from the Braves, Juan Uribe hit a walk-off single to give the Mets a 3-2 win over the Dodgers, the team with which he started the year before being traded to Atlanta.

NUMBERS GAME

Madison Bumgarner is slugging .465 this season after hitting a home run off Chris Bassitt on Saturday, his third long ball of the season. That's by far the best slugging percentage among pitchers with more than 10 plate appearances and the same slugging percentage as Athletics' All-Star catcher Stephen Vogt.

TURN BACK THE CLOCK

July 29, 2013

At 42 years, 6 months and 22 days, Jason Giambi becomes the oldest player to hit a walk-off home run. Giambi's two-run homer off of Ramon Troncoso completes the Indians' 3-2 comeback win over the White Sox. The record previously was held by Hank Aaron, who hit a walk-off to beat the Rangers on July 11, 1976, when he was 42 years, 5 months and 7 days old.

TRIVIA CORNER

Randy Johnson, who was inducted into the National Baseball Hall of Fame on Sunday, finished with 4,875 career strikeouts, the most ever for a left-handed pitcher and the second-most ever behind only Nolan Ryan. Which left-handed pitcher has the second-most career strikeouts?

Price could be right

Former Cy Young winner among those who might be dealt by Friday

Few days in baseball have as much excitement off the field as the non-waiver trade deadline. Last year there were 12 deals made before the deadline, and that doesn't even take into account the 19 trades made earlier in the month.

Although this year's deadline isn't until Friday at 4 p.m. ET, there have been plenty of moves made already. The first big domino to fall was Reds ace Johnny Cueto going to Kansas City for a package highlighted by 2014 first-round pick Brandon Finnegan. The Astros also bolstered their rotation with Scott Kazmir, and the Angels and Pirates added injury replacements at third base (Conor Gillaspie and Aramis Ramirez).

Now more than ever, teams are willing to buy at the trade deadline because the extra wild card spot allows more teams to be in contention. Eighteen clubs were within five games of a playoff spot as of Monday afternoon. Here is a list of the most likely players to be traded by Friday afternoon and some possible locations where they could end up.

Detroit Tigers: David Price and Yoenis Cespedes

Although the Tigers just acquired him last July, Price could be on the move again. He is going to be a free agent in two months, and there's a strong possibility the Tigers won't be able to re-sign the former Cy Young Award winner. And given that they are below .500 and have to leap four teams to secure a wild card spot, the Tigers may sell off their free agents-to-be.

Price won't fetch the same return he did last year — a top-50 prospect (Willy Adames), a young pitcher (Drew Smyly) and a young infielder (Nick Franklin) — because he would only be a two-month rental, but he is still the best player on the market. A contender such as the Dodgers, Giants, Blue Jays or Cardinals may be interested.

Cespedes is another free agent-to-be, and the Tigers will be extra motivated to move him because a clause in his contract will make it impossible to get a compensation pick if he leaves in free agency. The left fielder is having one of the best seasons of his career, and teams such as the Mets, Angels or Pirates — all of which need offense — could be interested.

Philadelphia Phillies: Cole Hamels and Jonathan Papelbon

Hamels' name has come up a lot lately since he is one of the few players on the Phillies' dismal roster with significant trade value. Hamels has a fairly reasonable $67.5 million left on his contract, which runs through the 2018 season — with a $20 million team option for 2019 — although the Phillies will likely have to eat some of that money. The Dodgers, Rangers and Astros have been connected to Hamels.

Papelbon has been vocal about wanting out of Philadelphia, but he would bring a much smaller return because — barring an injury — his $13 million option will vest for next year. A team looking for bullpen help such as the Nationals, Blue Jays, and Cubs could be interested.

San Diego Padres: Justin Upton, James Shields and Craig Kimbrel

Even after winning eight of their last 11 games, the Padres are 7.5 games out of a wild card spot. With Upton set to hit the open market this winter and unlikely to return, it could make sense to trade him to a team looking for more power such as the Mets, Pirates or Angels and re-stock a farm system that was devastated by their rapid rebuild.

Shields still has $65 million over three years remaining on the contract he signed last winter, but he could be an attractive arm for a team looking to bolster its rotation such as the Dodgers, Blue Jays or Tigers. He is striking out more batters than ever (10.2 K/9) but also allowing more walks (3.3 BB/9) and home runs (1.4 HR/9) than ever.

The reliever market is always busy in July, and Kimbrel — who was acquired by the Padres last offseason — is among the best available, even in a down year. A losing team doesn't have much use for a closer, and the Padres could be looking to unload his $25 million remaining over two years.

Cincinnati Reds: Mike Leake, Aroldis Chapman and Jay Bruce

Cueto has already been sent packing, and Leake — also a free agent-to-be — could be next. The former first-rounder is just entering his prime and has consistently had an ERA in the mid-to-upper-3.00s, but the Reds are viewed as unlikely to re-sign him this winter.

Chapman and Bruce would fetch larger hauls and signal a complete rebuild. Chapman is on a reasonable contract (he isn't eligible for free agency until after the 2016 season), and Bruce has just $13.5 million guaranteed past this year. Bruce would interest teams looking for a longer-term solution than Upton or Cespedes.

Extra bats: Adam Lind (Brewers), Gerardo Parra (Brewers) and Ben Zobrist (A's)

The Brewers and A's are well out of contention, and Parra and Zobrist are set to be free agents this winter. Lind could be a very good platoon bat for the Cardinals, and the Mets, Royals or Giants could be a good fit for versatile Zobrist or Parra.

Extra starters: Jeff Samardzija (White Sox), Yovani Gallardo (Rangers) and Mat Latos (Marlins)

A pair of free agents-to-be and a starter on a cost-cutting team, these three fit the bill of pitchers who will likely be on the move this week. The Yankees, Blue Jays and Dodgers will likely be among the most interested teams.

Extra relievers: Francisco Rodriguez (Brewers) and Tyler Clippard (A's)

With the Brewers and Athletics out of contention, these pitchers may be on the move. Clippard has less money tied to him long-term, which makes him more affordable to small-market teams.

ATHLON SPORTS POWER RANKING

- 1. Cardinals Handled business against lowly Braves and White Sox.
- 2. Royals Johnny Cueto finally gives them a bona fide ace.
- 3. Pirates Taking three of four from the Nationals is big.
- 4. Dodgers A healthy Carl Crawford adds to an already deep bench.
- 5. Nationals Hitting a cold spell, just 4-6 since the All-Star break.
- 6. Angels Mike Trout is back to leading baseball in WAR.
- 7. Yankees Second in the league in scoring with 450 runs in 97 games.
- 8. Astros Scott Kazmir is a solid upgrade to the rotation.
- 9. Blue Jays Mark Buehrle is quietly having a career season.
- 10. Giants Red hot, having won 11 of the past 12.
- 11. Twins Top prospect Byron Buxton still far from returning from injury.
- 12. Cubs Lost ground in the wild card race, getting swept by the Phillies.
- 13. Mets Third in the league in ERA.
- 14. Orioles Getting swept by the Yankees hurts division hopes.
- 15. Rays Only three teams strike out more often.

- 16. Tigers Team may be ready to sell off David Price and Yoenis Cespedes.
- 17. Rangers Nearly back to .500 after winning four of five.
- 18. Mariners Treading water at the bottom of a tough division.
- 19. Padres Ready to move Justin Upton, James Shields, Craig Kimbrel.
- 20. Red Sox Playoff hopes fading after losing eight of 10.
- 21. Athletics League-high 87 errors are nine more than any other team.
- 22. Indians League-high walk rate makes up for abysmal .248 batting average.
- 23. Braves Scoring just 2.4 runs per game since the All-Star break.
- 24. Diamondbacks Four players have double-digit steals.
- 25. White Sox A sweep of Cleveland pulls them out of the cellar of the Central.
- 26. Marlins Jose Fernandez has been excellent in his four starts.
- 27. Reds More trades likely after dealing Johnny Cueto.
- 28. Brewers Aramis Ramirez is the first of many players to be traded.
- 29. Rockies Scored 17 runs on the Reds, their highest output since 2012.
- 30. Phillies Ben Revere is hitting .385/.418/.404 this month.

With Boston Out, Can Los Angeles Revive a US Olympic Bid?

By Eddie Pellis

The Associated Press

Boston's bid to host the 2024 Olympics was undercut by its own mayor, its skeptical public and, finally, leaders of the U.S. Olympic Committee, who were tired of the city's ever-changing blueprint.

Next, it may be time to see if there's more Olympic love in Los Angeles.

After the USOC and Boston cut ties on Monday, CEO Scott Blackmun said the federation still wants to try to host the 2024 Games. The USOC has until Sept. 15 to officially name its candidate. Several Olympic leaders have quietly been pushing Los Angeles — the city that invented the modern-day template for the Olympics when it played host in 1984 — as the best possible substitute.

Approval ratings that couldn't sneak out of the 40s were the first sign of trouble for Boston, and it became clear the bid was doomed in the 72-hour period before the USOC board met with bid leaders Monday and they jointly decided to pull the plug.

On Friday, Massachusetts Gov. Charlie Baker stuck to his previous position: That he'd need a full report from a consulting group before he would throw his weight behind the bid. On Monday morning, Mayor Marty Walsh slapped together a news conference to announce he wouldn't be pressured into signing the host city contract that essentially sticks the city and state with the burden of any cost overruns.

No governor. No mayor. No bid.

"Boston 2024 has expressed confidence that, with more time, they could generate the public support necessary to win the bid and deliver a great games," Blackmun said. "They also recognize, however, that we are out of time if the USOC is going to be able to consider a bid from another city."

The Boston bid started souring within days of its beginning in January, beset by poor communication and an active opposition group that kept public support low. At his news conference, Walsh said the opposition to the

In this Feb. 5 file photo, people hold up placards against the Olympic Games coming to Boston, during the first public forum regarding the city's 2024 Olympic bid, in Boston. Boston's mayor delivered a harsh warning to the city's effort to host the 2024 Olympics on Monday when he declared he wouldn't sign any document "that puts one dollar of taxpayer money on the line for one penny of overruns on the Olympics." That document is the host city contract that most in the Olympics consider crucial to any city's success.

Olympics amounted to about "10 people on Twitter." He miscalculated, and the Internet struck back. The hashtag #10peopleonTwitter started trending.

The chairs of No Boston Olympics planned a celebration at a Boston pub.

"We need to move forward as a city, and today's decision allows us to do that on our own terms, not the terms of the USOC or the IOC," they said in a statement. "We're better off for having passed on Boston 2024."

Boston 2024 chairman Steve Pagliuca said the move was made "in order to give the Olympic movement in the United States the best chance to bring the Games back to our country in 2024."

The United States hasn't hosted a Summer Olympics since the Atlanta Games in 1996, or any Olympics since the Salt Lake City Winter Games in 2002. Bids for 2012 (New York) and 2016 (Chicago) both ended in fourth-place embarrassments.

The USOC spent nearly two years on a mostly secret domestic selection process for 2024 that began with letters to almost three dozen cities gauging interest in hosting the games. The thought was that the long gap between Olympics, combined with the USOC's vastly improved relationship with international leaders, would make this America's race to lose. Instead, the federation ran into trouble before getting to the starting line.

There's still time to save face if chairman Larry Probst and Blackmun make quick phone calls to leaders in Los Angeles, including Mayor Eric Garcetti and agent/power broker Casey Wasserman. Garcetti released a statement saying he'd had no contact with the USOC, but was willing to talk.

Los Angeles, a finalist in the domestic bid process along with San Francisco and Washington, has already hosted the 1932 and 1984 Olympics.

The '84 Games, with former USOC chairman Peter Ueberroth helping call the shots, came in the wake of the 1980 Moscow boycott and a bidding process in which only one other city — Tehran — expressed serious interest. Los Angeles reinvigorated the struggling Olympic brand. Some of the venues, including the L.A. Coliseum, are already in place and could be spruced up for the 2024 Games.

Still, the USOC was going through its vetting process, some in the International Olympic Committee chafed at a possible return to a sprawling, traffic-choked city that the Olympics had been to twice already. But as the Boston bid tanked, Los Angeles started looking better.

Probst will get a first-hand feel for it all later this week when he attends an IOC meeting in Malaysia.

Meanwhile, the Boston bid will never see where it stands against Rome, Paris, Hamburg, Germany, and, quite possibly, Toronto, which is considering a bid. The bid's one and only public disclosure report, released in March, said they spent $2 million over the initial months of the bid.

Boston's initial bid team talked a big game, but made empty promises. Recently released documents show organizers underestimated the amount of opposition and downplayed the possibility of a statewide referendum on the games.

Most of that bid team was replaced, though the new team, led by Pagliuca, didn't fare much better. Their new plan took a blowtorch to the popular idea of a compact, walkable Olympics, instead spreading venues around the metro area and the state. There was no firm plan for a media center, considered one of the biggest projects at any games. Even though complex insurance policies were in place, claims that the public wouldn't be on the hook for the multibillion-dollar sports event never gained traction.

Walsh's news conference Monday reflected that.

"I will not sign a document that puts one dollar of taxpayers' money on the line for one penny of overruns on the Olympics," he said.

Turns out, he won't have to.

Kyle Busch Takes Brickyard 400 at Indy for 3rd Straight Cup Win

By David Scott

The Charlotte Observer

INDIANAPOLIS — Kyle Busch continued his remarkable string of success Sunday, winning the Brickyard 400 at Indianapolis Motor Speedway in a green-white-checker finish.

It was Busch's fourth victory in five NASCAR Sprint Cup races since he came back from a broken leg and foot sustained at Daytona Beach, Fla., in February. Busch also swept the weekend at Indianapolis after winning Saturday's Xfinity Series race.

The victory moved Busch to within 23 points of the 30th spot in the Sprint Cup standings. He needs to finish in the top 30 to qualify for the Chase.

Joey Logano came close to giving team owner Roger Penske his first NASCAR victory at Indianapolis, but finished second. Kevin Harvick was third and Martin Truex finished fourth.

Turning Point

The race came down to a final restart on the 163rd lap. Logano briefly nosed ahead of Busch but couldn't hold the lead. Busch jumped ahead and stayed ahead throughout the final two overtime laps.

Three Who Mattered

Kyle Busch: He wins at Indianapolis for a first time, keeps his hot streak going and draws ever closer to a spot in the Chase.

Joey Logano: Runner-up finish is his fourth top-10 at Indy, but a Penske driver has still never won a NASCAR race at Indianapolis.

Jeff Gordon: Wrecks and finishes 42nd in the final race of his career at track near Pittsboro, Ind., the town he lived in as a teenager.

Observations

- The aerodynamic package used in the race apparently didn't accomplish much more than keeping the interior of the cars extremely hot. Drafting wasn't much different than in previous Brickyard races, drivers said.
- Harvick also wasn't happy with how the package worked, sarcastically saying after the race that "our goal is more drafting and more pack racing, so we'll see if we can get to that."
- Logano wasn't happy with finishing second. He said if you don't win at Indianapolis, whether you finish second, last or anywhere between doesn't matter.

They Said It

"We're a championship-contending team. Now we've got to be championship eligible." — Busch.

Browns Coach Pettine Calls QB Josh McCown Likely Starter

BEREA, Ohio (TNS) — Browns coach Mike Pettine met with reporters Monday at team headquarters and addressed several topics about the state of the team with training camp scheduled to open Thursday.

Pettine said veteran journeyman Josh McCown will likely be the starting quarterback for the Sept. 13 regular-season opener against the New York Jets, but the coach hasn't officially named a starter. He said Johnny Manziel is definitely second on the depth chart, but he also admitted there is a clear separation between McCown and Manziel, largely because of experience.

Pettine also rejected speculation about his relationship with general manager Ray Farmer and an engaging power struggle. He said no rift or tug of war exists and the two men "are singing out of the same hymnal on virtually every decision."

Pettine discussed Terrelle Pryor's transition from a quarterback to wide receiver, acknowledging it won't be easy. But Pettine also conceded Pryor "has the skill set" to make the team. Pettine said he wouldn't rule out him appearing at quarterback down the road.

NOT YOUR AVERAGE Car Show IN NAPAVINE

Redneck CAR SHOW:

RELAY FOR LIFE TEAM PUTS 'FUN' IN FUNDRAISING

By Carrina Stanton
 For The Chronicle

You're not likely to see a cherry red convertible or a baby blue cruiser at the Napavine Redneck Car Show.

"This is not your ordinary car show," said Deana Bishop, one of the organizers of the event, which happens this year on Sunday in Napavine. "It's about the fun. It's not so much about the cars."

This is the seventh year for the Redneck Car Show, a fundraiser for Team Laugh Out Loud, a Lewis County Relay for Life team. Relay for Life is a 24-hour relay style walk and run that raises money for the American Cancer Society. Team member Cris Dodd said it was this cause that brought all of them together in the first place.

"We've all been affected by cancer in one way or another," Dodd said.

And the inspiration for their flagship fundraiser also came from close to home. Dodd said she noticed people around town, even some of her family members, who love their big, raised, modified trucks.

"You're in Lewis County and there's a lot of rednecks around here and there's a lot of country boys who like to mess around with their cars," Steffen said.

"We figured why not have a show that caters to these guys," Dodd said.

The Redneck Car Show is just one of a series of unusual fundraisers the team has had, including Jell-o shots at Frosty's, a mixed martial arts fight and a Saver's Donation Drive for Value Village where they get paid by the pound to bring certain donated items into the shop.

"We're a think outside the box kind of team," Dodd said.

The Lewis County Relay for Life takes place each year the third Saturday of May, which means Team Laugh Out Loud is already fundraising for the 2016 event. They said their hope is to raise more money that the 2015 top fundraising team, which raised about $15,000. And they have confidence they could come out on top this year.

"Our very first year we came in third place," Dodd said.

"And we just totally winged it," Bishop added.

The first Redneck Car Show in 2010 gathered about 40 vehicles. But over the years they have seen waning interest, which the organizers are combating by changing things up a bit. First and foremost they visited other traditional car shows to learn about what car enthusiasts like and they decided to focus on two things: prizes and activities. Those entering cars in the show will compete for dash plaques in categories including: biggest, loudest, muddiest, most redneck, least redneck and people's choice. There will also be competitions for two- and three-wheeled motorcycles for: most chrome, least chrome, loudest, most decorated and people's choice. Kids can also get in the action by bringing their own entries of anything they can ride on or in.

"They've brought wagons, power wheels, bikes, trikes," Dodd said. "We've seen about every mode of kids transportation there is."

So what makes a vehicle redneck? Well, it's a lot of things. It can be a Chevy body with a Ford engine. It can be a vehicle that's muddy inside and out (an actual contestant from the past). Or it can be a vehicle so cobbled together it has to be towed to the event (another actual contestant).

"It's stuff you wouldn't ordinarily see anybody driving down the street," Bishop explained. "This has been modified to be in the field or the back woods. It's back yard project at its finest."

"Things used how they're not supposed to be used. MacGyver stuff," team member Carrie Steffen said.

"Ones you need ladders to get into," team member Kelly Engel added with a laugh.

The event will also include contests that are open to both those who bring cars to show and those who just come to see the cars. For kids, contests will include: Sunflower seed spitting, plunger ball toss, tire race and tug of war. For adults, contests will include: toilet seat horseshoes, tug of war, family-friendly frozen T-shirt and wet T-shirt contests, and wheelbarrow races.

Organizers have also added a new pit crew contest to this year's lineup.

"This is for the guys to come and show us how quickly they can change their tires but they have to do it redneck style without power tools, without air tools, without plug-in tools. Only wrenches," Bishop explained.

Admission for spectators is free but there will be a redneck wishing well — a purple camouflage toilet where people can make donation to the Relay team.

Mossyrock Blueberry Festival Gets Underway on Friday

Several new events have been added to this year's Mossyrock Blueberry Festival, which will be held Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the East Lewis County town.

Making their first appearance at the Blueberry Festival are an expanded three-day quilt show, Backfire Band concert (Friday), an 8k run and Cow Girls Dream concert (Saturday), and bicycle ride crossing the Mossyrock Dam (Saturday).

Also on the schedule are:

- pancake breakfasts (Saturday and Sunday mornings)
- car show (Saturday)
- parade on State Street (11 a.m. Saturday)
- BMX track (bring your own bike)

- 5k Trailrace (Saturday)
- numerous musical events
- Chris Guenther concert (Sunday)

Most events will be held in Klickitat Prairie Park. The car show is held on the school grounds, while the TailRaces start on the south side of Mossyrock Dam. The bicycle ride starts on the north end of Mossyrock Dam.

A $1 admission fee for those 6 and over is charged for events at Klickitat Prairie Park. Parking is included. The parade and car show are free.

A full schedule of events can be found at mossyrockfestivals.org.

WASHINGTON STATE HISTORY

Tacoma's Olof Bull Plays His Fiddle on the Summit of Mount Rainier on July 28, 1896

HistoryLink.org

Tacoma's Olof Olsson Bull (1852-1933) scales Mount Rainier and plays on his fiddle several solo songs — including "Nearer, My God, To Thee" — at the Columbia Crest summit. That feat will be credited in a 1962 mountaineering history book as "a remarkable solo climb," which almost made further history as Rainier's first such; however another hiker, a Mr. A. B. Wood, suddenly passed Bull on the trail mid-route (Haines). Undaunted, Bull forged upward and his brief high-altitude (14,000+ feet above sea level) concert was that day's capper.

Divine Music

In 1890 Professor Olof Bull arrived in Tacoma. He'd been born in Undersvik, Hälsingland, Sweden, on March 31, 1852, to parents Olof and Katarina Bull. As one history put it: "From early childhood he evinced extraordinary talent for music which was cultivated to a marked degree under A. Sorenson and other masters. In 1869 he sailed for America, arriving in St. Paul (Minnesota), where he rapidly gained fame as a genius violinist. In 1876 he organized the 'Olof Bull Concert Company' which scattered divine music the land over, and rose to enviable reputation. In 1881 he was appointed musical director of the Boston Opera, which he resigned in a year to accept the professorship of violin in the Chicago Musical College, where he remained until 1890" (Stine).

Upon his arrival out West, Professor Bull worked as a violin teacher and as musical director of the orchestra at the Tacoma Theatre (South 9th Street & Southwest corner of C Street (today's Broadway) — a "chair he is filling with distinction. Professor Olof Bull is a genius as a violinist, and greater still a man of character, kind and compassionate" (Stine). Bull's students were known in Tacoma for giving recitals of classics by composers such as Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Musin, and Handel, which were appreciated by the entertainment-starved locals.

Moonlight Musicales on the Mount

While living in Tacoma, Bull became — like so many of his townfolk — thoroughly enchanted by the 14,000 foot mountain that dominated their eastward skyline. Thus, as an energetic and fit man, he was among those who made early efforts to mount expeditions to surmount it.

In August 1892 Professor Bull climbed his way up to Paradise Park — a base camp from where he intended to make the ascent (with his violin), but he failed in that goal. It is known, however, that he did succeed in entertaining "some excursionists encamped there with some charming moonlight musicales" (Haines, p. 138).

A Violin's Violent Demise

The next year saw Bull return with a six-man party:

"He again set out for the mountain in the expectation of ascending it with his violin to give a concert upon the summit, but his luck was not with him. As a prelude to his misfortune, the violinist fell into the Nisqually River while fetching water for the camp on the second day; then, soon after starting the following morning, his violin fell from the wagon, which ran over instrument and case. But, the smashing of his violin was not the end of Mr. Bull's troubles. He lost control while glissading a slope ... was dashed into some rocks and painfully injured, ending his mountain climbing for the season, with a ride on an improvised rescue toboggan" (Haines, pp. 164-165).

Bull's fascination with Rainier remained strong: One vintage photograph, probably from 1893, shows him and his climbing party near the top.

In 1896 he finally hauled his violin up to the summit and there he played it.

Bull made it to the top again in 1898. On this occasion he and his climbing party explored for a full two hours before descending to Paradise.

Professional Professor

In 1896 Professor Bull was hired as a violin instructor at Puget Sound University, and in 1899 George F. Whitworth's Sumner Academy — originally founded in the village of Sumner in 1883, and incorporated as Whitworth College in 1890 — moved about 10 miles from its original home, westward to Tacoma. There, upon re-opening on January 2, 1900, Bull was among its new faculty members. By 1914 the school had relocated to Spokane, and in 2007 it became Whitworth University.

Olof Bull passed away on April 19, 1933.

Corn Soup

By the editors of Relish Magazine

Ask for “chowder,” and you could be repeating the first word coined by Europeans in America. Bring a spoonful to your mouth, and you could be enjoying the first European-American dish. According to some historians, the word “chowder” was coined long before the Pilgrims sighted Cape Cod. Fishermen from various parts of Europe were haunting the fertile waters of Newfoundland since John Cabot’s voyage of 1497. In their multilingual gatherings, they corrupted the French word chaudiere, the pot in which French fishermen made their stews, into the word “chowder.”

Our Corn Chowder is just the thing for summer—when corn is at its best.

In this version, we sautéed the sweet kernels from Peaches-and-Cream corn and some chopped potatoes in bacon drippings. Thickened with a bit of flour, the mixture then got a healthy dose of milk, then simmered about 30 minutes. We added a handful of feta and topped the soup with a smattering of velvety roasted tomatoes (a little like gilding the lily, we know). Add a bit of basil, and you’re done.

Relish Magazine/Mark Boughton

Fresh Corn Chowder with Feta and Roasted Tomatoes

Ingredients:

- 3 ounces bacon, diced
- 1 shallot, diced
- 1 small onion, chopped
- 2 Yukon Gold potatoes, peeled and chopped
- Fresh sweet corn cut from 4 ears (about 3 cups)
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 6 cups 2 percent reduced-fat milk
- 2 ounces feta cheese
- Roasted tomatoes

Serves 6

Directions:

1. Place bacon, shallot and onion in a large saucepan or Dutch oven. Cook over medium heat 10 minutes or until bacon is crispy. Add potatoes and corn; stir. Add flour and stir well. Cook 5 minutes. Add milk. Turn heat to low and simmer 20 to 30 minutes, until potatoes are tender. To finish, add feta, salt and pepper to taste and dollop with roasted tomatoes.

ADVICE: Dear Abby

Woman Discovers Man’s Eyes Aren’t Wandering by Accident

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 58-year-old, twice divorced, hard-working, middle-class female. I spend most of my time working and involved with my three adult children. About a year ago I started dating someone. He is 63, very helpful and claims he’s madly in love with me and appreciates this opportunity for a normal, wholesome life. Occasionally I’ll catch him staring at women’s butts. It bothers me a bit, but oh well, he’s a man. Last week our family went camping. At least a dozen times I saw him position himself so that he could stare at my 40-year-old daughter’s behind. Keep in mind, my daughter dresses VERY conservatively, and this trip was almost all jeans and T-shirts.

As we were packed up and ready to head home, she said she had to relieve herself and headed into the bushes (this is a remote campground). Instead of my boyfriend looking the other way as we all did, he stared and gawked in her direction obviously trying to sneak a peek!

Abby, I am devastated and disgusted. Please give me your take on this.
— NORMAL OR NOT IN NEW YORK

DEAR NORMAL: For a man to look at women’s body parts is normal, but what your boyfriend did goes beyond that. For him to try to sneak a peek at your daughter while she relieved herself indicates that he is a voyeur. Now you must determine whether he just takes advantage of an opportunity or he actively seeks it out, which could present a problem in the future.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter is a 29-year-old new mother. I know times have changed since I was a new mom, but the restrictions my daughter has put on visiting her and my new grandson are unrealistic.

Since his birth three weeks ago, I have seen him only once — at the hospital. She has taken him on two outings: one where there were 10 people and another where there were more than 100. (My grandson has not yet received any of his childhood vaccinations.)

My daughter now says that when I visit, I must change into freshly washed clothes before entering her house. She’s afraid that the secondhand smoke will harm him.

I’m not unintelligent. I have bought disinfectants to spray on myself, as well as breath strips. I also wash my hands, arms and face before I hold him. Am I unrealistic in thinking she’s asking too much, or should I say something to her and let her know how much she has hurt me?

— CRYING DAY AND NIGHT
DEAR CRYING: I do think you should talk to your daughter. What she may be trying to do is encourage you to quit smoking. I doubt that she’s doing it to be hurtful.

Her motivation may be that she knows how unhealthy smoking is and would like you to be around until your grandchild is well into adulthood. The odds of that happening will be higher if you can find a way to give up tobacco. And when you do, consider putting all the money you save — and it will be plenty — into an education fund for your grandson.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

INDEPENDENT THIRD PARTY EXAMINER OPPORTUNITY

Washington State Department of Licensing is seeking solicitation for Commercial Driver's License holders, with a Class A, to become a contracted Third Party Examiner. This recruitment is statewide. There are IMMEDIATE openings in Spokane, Vancouver and Tri-Cities. Examiners will administer a CDL skills test to applicants according to state and federal regulations. Applicable candidates must be registered in Washington's Electronic Business Solutions (WEBS) and complete the state required qualification packet through WEBS.

To register in WEBS, follow this link: <http://des.wa.gov/services/ContractingPurchasing/Business/Pages/WEBRegistration.aspx> This page will provide information needed to register in WEBS. For this solicitation, the commodity code is 924-20.

Once registered in WEBS, follow this link to access the solicitation documents for the RFP K5112 a Third Party Tester - Commercial Driver Licenses: <http://des.wa.gov/services/ContractingPurchasing/Business/BidOpportunities/Pages/default.aspx> Click current Bid Opportunities, then "goods & services". Select "Licensing, Department of" from the Filter by Government Organization drop down list. Click search.

Any questions concerning WEBS contact Customer Service at (360)902-7400 or webcustomerservice@ga.wa.gov. Any questions or concerns about the RFP, contact the RFP Coordinator at DOLProcurements@dol.wa.gov.

HOROSCOPES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 29, 2015

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
When asked to make a move, act quickly or the offer may be withdrawn. Put extra effort into your work and educational pursuits. Greater financial freedom is heading your way.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
Do something out of the ordinary. A short excursion with friends will take your mind off of your woes. All work and no play is bad for your physical and mental health.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)
Unanticipated changes will confuse you. Accept what is out of your control instead of letting it bring you down. As time passes, you will realize you were spared distress and loss.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22)
New friends will get a charge out of your engaging wit and sense of fun. Join a group of individuals whose ideals and beliefs mirror your own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21)
Take a step back and let things unfold naturally. A detailed project that requires concentration or endurance will help you forget about what's going on in your personal life.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
Don't get drawn into a battle of wills with someone who is looking for a fight. The less reaction you show, the easier it will be to ward off hassles or challenges.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19)
Refuse to be tempted by a dubious offer. Don't jeopardize your reputation or step into a vulnerable position. Problems will escalate if you are deemed untrustworthy. Stand behind your words.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20)
Get involved in something that motivates you. Donating your time or services to a cause close to your heart will be rewarding in more ways than one. You can make a difference.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
Worrying about matters beyond your control will add to your stress. Look for a creative way to increase your cash flow and secure your future. It's up to you to bring about positive change.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
Love and romance are highlighted. Your confidence will soar if you collaborate with people who can help propel you to success. A promising offer is evident.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
It's a perfect time to make improvements to your surroundings and lifestyle that will add value and comfort to your home. Monetary gains are within reach.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
Lending or borrowing money or belongings will be to your advantage. Before you point fingers at others, you should make sure your own actions are reputable. Negativity will lead to disappointment.

THURSDAY, JULY 30, 2015

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
Minor health issues are likely if you have been pushing yourself to the limit. Get adequate rest and don't feel guilty if you need time to ensure your own well-being.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
Whether you hang out with family or mingle with friends, this is a perfect day to get out and socialize. Youngsters and elders will add joy to your life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)
Don't expect problems at home to go away without your addressing the situation head-on. Face up to the difficult points and find an amicable solution before matters spin out of control, leaving you few options.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22)
Around-the-clock work isn't a healthy way to live. A getaway with friends, family or a loved one will help recharge your batteries. A romantic liaison will enhance your personal life.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21)
Securing your future should take top priority. Go over your banking and financial documents with an expert to see if there are money-saving concepts you can employ.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
Don't sacrifice a friendship because of hearsay. You will realize that some people delight in spreading negative rumors. Before you ruin a good thing, gather the facts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19)
Dealings with authority figures or superiors will have to be handled carefully. State your case clearly to avoid an uncomfortable misunderstanding or loss. Consider a professional change.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20)
You should consider a position of leadership. Join a fundraising group or association in your community. Your heartfelt compassion and ability to treat others with dignity will add to your popularity.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
A real estate deal can turn into a lucrative investment. If you host a gathering that includes children and older friends or relations, you will be appreciated for your generosity and kindness.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
You can expect to encounter someone who shares your goals, tastes and talents. Community events will be ideal places to meet a kindred spirit. Consider a partnership.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
Be prepared to take on extra duties if someone reneges on a promise. A lonely relative may put additional demands on your time. Don't make promises you cannot keep.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
Don't let anyone talk you into doing something that goes against your principles. Love is on the horizon, and enhancing your appearance will add to your appeal.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Ads will run in the Business & Service Directory for 30 consecutive publishing days without changes to copy or layout. If you have any questions, please call Customer Service at (360) 807-8203.
 Chapter 18.27.100 of the Revised Code of Washington requires that all advertisements for construction-related services include the contractor's current Department of Labor and Industries registration number in the advertisement. Failure to obtain a Certificate of Registration from L&I or to show the registration number in all advertising will result in a fine up to $5000 against the unregistered contractor. For more information, call Labor & Industries Specialty Compliance Services Division at (800) 647-0962 or check L&I's website at: www.lni.wa.gov.
